The McLaughlin Cannery of Beaverton is beginning its third week. This is the peak of the season, about 50 tons of berries are handled each day, more could be taken care of, but they are not able to get pickers. Custom Canning Kitchen Popular

Many thrifty and particular housewives have a definite preference for home canned foods and to obtain them they are willing to subject themselves and family to many inconveniences until the canning season is over. The task of preparing the food with ordinary household equipment requires hours of time and the actual canning process means a clutter of jars and covers and lots of uncomfortable heat.

Much of the difficulty experienced during the canning season has been removed by the modern custom canning method, which provides the latest quick methods for shelling peas, cutting string beans, pitting cherries, cutting corn from the cob and all the otherwise tedious processes of preparation. Then the actual canning is done in scientifically sealed tin containers under controlled heat, assuring a uniform product.

All the housewife needs to provide, when using the custom cannery, are the fruits, vegetables or meats. The cannery furnishes all of the other equipment and does the actual canning at a low cost per can. See their ad in this paper.

Visit the Custom Canning Kitchen at 5968 NE 42nd street in Portland.
