

Grow Bedding Plants In Convenient Spruce Veneer Plant Bands

Few of us realize the check or damaging effect of taking young plants from open soil and transplanting them. Some plants in the greenhouse apparently are not as much affected but we know from long experience that asters, mums, pees and many others show this checking affected strikingly when transplanted even in a protected greenhouse. Planting outdoors will check them severely. The one objection to flat grown bedding plants so largely sold to home gardeners is that frequently half the summer is necessary to reestablish them after digging them up and transplanting. The difficulty is met by growing them in pots, but pots cost real money and are easily broken and the soil dries out so fast in spring that it is necessary to watch them continuously.

The cheapest and best method is to plant them in wooden plant boxes. Then when plants are put out without the heavy check that follows they get into bearing earlier. Further more plants grown in bands will require only half the watering of those grown in round or cone-shaped pots. This is because the space between the pots give a greater evaporation surface while with the square bottomless bands the one evaporation that takes place is from the surface of the earth which is Nature's way. Plant bands are made from 1 1/2 inches to four inches square and from 2 1/2 inches to 4 inches deep.

These wooden plant bands are manufactured exclusively by the Coast Veneer Co., foot of North Pittsburg street, Portland. They are made from the finest clear spruce obtainable. They are made collapsible and great numbers can be packed in small space. Their acceptance has been instantaneous for they fill a long needed want to the gardener. They are shipped in carload lots for use in the eastern market. Rapidly pots and paper containers are being displaced by wooden bands.

Mr. Day of the Coast Veneer Co. invented the spruce veneer plant band. Its development and manufacture provides a real industry in many millions of these plant bands the Pacific Northwest. Already are used annually and the potential market has only been touched.
