Holiday Accidents High Autoists Cautioned

Oregon drivers can make Memorial Day truly memorable this year by driving carefully and avoiding traffic accidents during the holiday weekend, Earl Snell, secretary of state, said today in urging all drivers and pedestrians to exercise more care on the Memorial Day holiday.

"With Memorial Day coming on Friday this year, many people will have three-day vacation periods and in consequence, there will be a heavy increase in traffic on Oregon highways leading to beach and mountain recreation areas," Snell declared. "This increase in traffic means greater exposure to accidents and necessitates additional care to avoid them."

"Holiday traffic in Oregon is usually from seven to ten percent greater than normal and with so many cars on the road, dangerous driving practices such as passing long strings of cars, are made even more hazardous."

Don't Be So Pessimistic Years of Prosperity May Be Ahead

Babson Park, Mass., May 30—In view of the changed situation in Washington following the collaboration between United France and Germany, the War will be shorter than most people think. Although we may, directly or indirectly, convey shipments to England yet, with Congress in its present mood, there is no chance of the United States now declaring War.

New Dealers Weakening

For this, and other reasons, there is no cause for the pessimism which is about today in Washington, New York, and most of the large cities. It is true that huge sums of money are being taken from the rich through terribly high taxes. This money is being given either to labor in the form of high wages or short hours, or is being distributed to the unfortunate through various forms of relief. Billions are being spent on tanks and airplanes; but are these any more wasteful than pleasure cars and crime. Crime alone, last year cost this country $15,000,000,000.

I got a new idea in Washington the other day. Here it is as put up by one of the New Deal economists. Said he: "Give us two or three years longer and these economic operations will not be necessary as the patients are constantly dying off. Isn't it just as humane to keep the economically inefficient businessmen, farmers, and unemployed free from pain and let them die naturally as it is to eliminate them now through bankruptcy? They have only a few more years to live anyway." This is a new thought to me; but there may be something in it.

Liquidating Labor

Labor leaders may have seen their best days for some time to come. During the past eight years labor has had the sympathy of not only the Administration, but also of a large part of the public. Even the newspapers of the country found it bad business to combat labor. Hence, labor leaders have been riding "high, wide, and handsome." This situation has greatly changed during the past few days. Strikes have become unpopular and labor leaders have been put on the defensive.

President Roosevelt and Ma Perkins may not have the guts to get after these labor leaders as they did the bankers and the utilities; but things move very fast these days. Who would have thought that membership on the New York Stock Exchange

1851 Pioneer Settled Near Beaverton

By ROY L. DAVIDSON

The strictly modern house of the Harry Robinson's near Robinson Station a few miles southwest of Beaverton, houses at least one article that harks back to another day. It is a fine, old clock with a case all bric-a-brac at the top, like the ones you used to see in the home of your grandparents, and rightly so, for this one belonged to Harry's grandfather, pioneer William J. Robinson, who emigrated to Oregon from Indiana in 1851.

Harry says that the clock was once discarded as useless after his grandfather died, but someone dug it out one day and tinkered with it a bit and since that day it has never once failed to keep perfect time. It goes right on ticking nonchalantly away in its old fashioned way, while just beneath it, a modern streamlined radio brings voices and music from far corners of the world into the room, drowning out the voice of the old clock. But this matters little to the old timepiece—it ticked long before the radio came, probably will tick right on after the radio has gone and been forgotten.

Harry's grandfather, William J. Robinson, was born in Pennsylvania, in 1829, and while still a boy was left with the family to support when his father was drowned in a canal accident. From the very beginning of his employment young Robinson demonstrated his mettle by thrift and industry, earning the respect of all his associates. In 1841, he moved to Indiana, where he was later married to Emmeline Barnum. Both husband and wife came of pioneer stock and though their resources were low, still they planned on the great adventure—the trip to Oregon—because they realized the greater opportunities in the West.

Selling off their belongings, such as they could not take with them, the Robinsons, with their two small boys, went to St. Joseph, Missouri, where the young father secured an outfit of cattle and some good mares, together with wagons. They embarked on their westward journey in company with 23 other wagons and after a toilsome trip that took more than six months, the weary party reached the region about The Dalles.

Young Robinson, then just 22, was a constant source of encouragement to his companions. If it was standing guard against a surprise attack by hostile Indians he could always be counted on; if there were strayed stock to account for, he was ready to go on the search. Sometimes, so they say, he would cheer up his fellow travellers by taking out the end board from his wagon and dancing a clog on it while somebody twanged away on a banjo.

Best of all was his generosity; when supplies ran low, William Robinson gladly shared his with the others until, at last, there was little left in his larder. It is said that he finally was forced to shoot ground squirrels which the family ate, cooked up with a little flour that still remained.

The wagon party broke camp in the Wasco region and started on the rough Barlow Pass route, built in '45 and '46 over the south shoulder of Mt. Hood. This road was constructed as a means of getting wagons and stock through to the Willamette Valley, without making the portage through Columbia Gorge. Until the construction of this road, the Columbia Gorge was the "bottleneck" that stumped the emigrants completely after they had made a journey of more than two thousand miles and overcome all difficulties.
