Early Hillsdale Settler Spins Yarn Of Peavine Railroad

About fifty-two years ago, around 1888, a young Swiss section worker on the old Peavine Express line, Portland to Dundee, was approached one day while working near Hillsdale Station, by his foreman (They used to call it Forest Station.)

"John," the foreman said, "I need fifteen dollars. Will you let me have it?" John Raz leaned on his shovel and looked the boss in the eye for a few seconds, before he answered.

"Well, foreman, I don't know if I have that much at home. But I'll see tonight." He was taken back a little by this request as the part of his boss but was totally unprepared for the next statement to follow.

"You see," the foreman explained in a smooth voice, "I've got to have this money, but you'll not lose anything, I'll see to that. You let me have it and there'll be not only the extra fifteen dollars in your next pay envelope, but plenty more besides!"

John didn't say anything more, but he couldn't get the thing out of his mind. He was new in this country and not very well posted on customs as yet. Just the year before, 1885, he with his two brothers and other members of the family had landed in the Hillsdale country from his native Switzerland. The three brothers were working to get a little capital so they could enter the dairy business. You'd expect just such a thing of Swiss emigrants, wouldn't you?

That night he got the money all right, fifteen dollars, and he told his mother about the foreman's words. "I do not like any such business, John," she told him. "I'd rather you'd have nothing to do with these things after this." John took the money to the boss next day. "I don't know what you meant yesterday, foreman," but I do not want any more than the fifteen dollars back."

"Oh you just leave that to me, Raz. That's my business—I'll take care of that." And the matter was dropped. The month finally ended, although the work on the road was not steady, the crew would work a day or so and then be off for sometime. But that suited John Raz just fine, for that gave him a chance to keep up the work on the farm that he was trying to clear up and get into shape. Finally came pay day and they got their pay envelopes. John counted up.

Besides his regular wages for the days he'd worked he discovered that he had also been given enough to repay his fifteen dollars, and ten dollars besides. He stuck the money in his pocket and went home. His mother only shook her head when he told her. "That's not right, John," she told him, but her words were hardly necessary for there was already a load on John's mind. He was trying to think of a way out of his difficulties. Should he take the money back and give it to the boss and explain that he could not take what he wasn't entitled to? At first that seemed the logical thing to do, but when he got to the tool house next morning, the other men were talking. They began to compare notes and soon learned that the crafty foreman had engineered the same deal with every man on the job!

After a bit the boss approached, swaggering along in a drunken state, as was often the case with him, for he was much given to tarrying on the lower end of a tilted bottle. They got the hand car on the rails and started down the track, with the men standing up holding onto the supports, but the boss, a trifle wobbly and worse for his condition, seated himself on the front of the car. His feet were dangling down, only a few inches above the ties and right alongside the rail and spinning wheels. The least little movement and he might have a foot caught under the wheel, or on a tie and be dragged from the car and run over.

"I couldn't stand to see his feet so close to danger. I didn't want to see him run over and killed if I could help it," John said when he told us about it the other day. I had to say something to him. "Foreman," I said, "Hadh't you better get your feet up before they catch on a tie or under a wheel?" That brought a rise out of him. "Raz," he yelled at me, "This is none of your affair! This is my business!"

John smiled as he told it to us. "I

Babson Says Better Times Ahead For Farm Communities

Babson Park, Mass., June 13—The industrial and defense areas of the country have long occupied our attention. The outlook for farm communities is now seen more clearly than was possible at the time I made my Annual Business Forecast on January 1, 1941. It will be a good year for farmers. Defense spending has been filtering through for several months past into the great agricultural areas. Large crops, the signing of the Fulmer Party Bill by the President, continued government buying, and other factors, all forecast better times in the wheat belt.

What is Parity?

For the past twenty years, succeeding administrations have tried various ways to restore farm purchasing power to the level of the years 1909-14. To bolster the latest attempt, the current farm bill provides for Commodity Credit Corporation loans up to 85% of the prices which wheat, corn, cotton, rice, and tobacco earned in 1909-1914. Thus, farmers will be able temporarily to provide for their needs in keeping up with advancing living costs if market prices do not rise high enough to make cash sales more attractive.

Commodity prices, wage rates, and other factors in the cost-of-living picture are moving upward gradually at the present time. Unless the farmer can receive something more than existing farm benefits he may find himself in a bad way in competing with industrial workers for the necessities and some of the luxuries of life. The farmer is in a far different position economically from the wage worker in that he has no one to look to for a raise in wages. Hence, the Administration set up machinery in the form of the mandatory loan bill to permit the farmer to borrow larger amounts against his crops than has been the case in previous years.

Big Supply of Wheat

Considering all crops, current surveys indicate that total acreage planted this year will be about the same as last year. Allowing for favorable weather the yield should thus be about the same as a year ago. Wheat is the big crop, however, that looks like it is going places in a big way. At least, with forecasts of a total supply of 1250 million bushels, we shall have a domestic supply equal to the record of 1250 million bushels in 1931-1932.

Certainly, 1941 will be a good year for the grains although from a statistical point of view the situation does not look so favorable. This is due to two factors. (1) The large carry-over. (2) A big prospective crop. The large carry-over is not such a factor this year as in previous years. After all, our rate of domestic consumption is running at high levels. True, normal export markets are shut off at the moment; but before the year is over we may be called upon to feed some of the conquered nations. Part of the government-owned supplies will go to feed our armed forces. While in a year of so-called normal conditions I would be disturbed over the statistical position of the grains, yet I can not now get excited over either the size of the carry-over or the new crop.

Farmers to Share in Defense Profits

With the rise in consumer purchasing power, due to increased wages and dividends, more money will be spent for farm products. Not only the wheat grower and those engaged in the raising of other grains, but also other types of farming, including cattle and hogs, fruit and poultry, cotton and sheep, as well as dairying will bring in more money as the defense program continues. We also must not forget that the purchasing program covers the export of farm products under the provisions of the Lease-Land Act. Already the combined average prices for all farm products are the highest in four years. Washington will undoubtedly attempt to curb any runaway tendencies, but after all the farmer deserves any break he can get. The Administration cannot continue to let wages soar without permitting the farmer
