LEON N. LEFEBVRE
"Inflation is a Relative Term"
When you talk about inflation what kind of inflation do you have in mind? A life insurance contract is a long time investment. It is paid for in both cheap and expensive dollars. Premiums are paid out of surplus dollars, but the Company returns them as necessity dollars in time of need. Then they become dear dollars.

When a person states that he would rather invest in real estate than life insurance, he overlooks the fact that life insurance is doing this very thing, but with the advantage to the policyholder that he does not have to worry about maintenance expense and increased taxation. Premiums are fixed and do not rise.
Let us remember, too, that if a man is paying premiums on life insurance for protection of dependents, which is primary purpose of insurance, then protection is just as essential when a dollar is cheap as when it is dear.—This information is furnished you through the courtesy of Leon N. Lefebvre.
