Junior Parade Set
For Next Friday

At the regular meeting of the Beaverton Kiwanis, Wednesday, June 18, U. G. Dubach spoke on The United States and the Far East. Dean Dubach, who is dean of men at O. S. C. pointed out to the Kiwanis that United States has only 6% of the world's area and only 6% of the world's population. He said that the three great nations of the future, meaning that is in fifty or one hundred years, would be United States, Russia and China. He also told the Kiwanis that no nation could be great without a great people whom he defined as those rugged and tough enough to endure without being slaves or having slaves under them. He explained that China has had a civilization for 4000 years and that ours in this country with 400 years was just starting. Dean Dubach said with the coming of night Asia goes to bed hungry for want of sufficient food distribution.

J. W. Poynter, chairman of the Washington County United Service organization told the Kiwanis that of the quota for Washington county's $1700 Beaverton should raise $250. The funds would be used to build community centers for selective service men at their camps.

It was announced that the Junior parade would be Friday, June 27 at 2:30 p. m. to be followed by races and games at the high school.

It was also announced that the Kiwanis would play a soft ball game with West Slope Improvement club on the evening of June 27.

The visitors of the evening were Mrs. Vanda Meyers of Beaverton, Mrs. Pearl Newman, Chatsworth, Ill., J. W. Poynter of Hillsboro, Dean and Mrs. Dubach of Corvallis.

Did Hitler get his ideas about conquering the world from the Klickitah and Cayuse Indians in Oregon, who took over the Tualatin, Calapooya and Molalla tribes and made them virtual slaves, exacting tribute from them? Be sure to read Roy L. Davidson's story in this issue.

Babson Doesn't Fear
War Restrictions

Babson Park, Mass., June 20—Letters are coming to me from manufacturers, merchants, salesmen, and others asking as to how the war will affect their businesses,—such questions as, "Will I be able to sell electric refrigerators?" "Will installment buying be allowed?" "Will more oil burners be manufactured?" etc. These people see so much in the papers about priorities, control of raw materials, manufacturers restrictions, and the like that they are thoroughly scared. They wonder whether they will have the goods to sell and whether people will be in a buying mood if they do have the goods to sell.

Can't Kill Industries

The first thing to remember is that human nature cannot be changed by legislation. I have learned this during World War I and when I was National Director of Information and Education at Washington. We shut down on Sunday motoring, but the money went into silk shirts instead of into gasoline. In England, they first shut off the sale of cosmetics to English working girls in the factories. The authorities soon found, that unless the girls could buy what they wanted the production of munitions fell off. Then, the Government went to the other extreme and installed in all factories slot machines for the sale of cosmetics.

I repeat: No Government restrictions can change human nature. This means that industries can't be killed. People will change their habits of riding from a stagecoach to a railroad train and from a railroad train to a bus or aeroplane; but the transportation industry is fundamental. Men will change their mode of fighting from bows and arrows to pistols and guns and then to tanks and bombing planes, but warfare is fundamental. We change our method of heating from wood pile to coal stove and then to the oil burner; but the heating industry still remains fundamental. Those who stick to their industry but are willing to change their methods are, in the long run, successful.

Finding New Uses

Our great grandparents did their reading by candlelight; our grandparents read with kerosene lamp; our parents lit the house with gas; while we use the incandescent lamp. The mode of lighting changed, but Continued on Page 2

Telephone Company Busy
Installing Dial System

West Coast Telephone Company installers are busy converting the Beaverton telephone system to dial automatic switching. The conversion process started Tuesday morning and is expected to be completed with all lines working on dial in about eight days. Detailed instructions are given in the new temporary supplementary directory which is handed to every subscriber as his new telephone is installed. A certain amount of confusion is normal and to be expected owing to the unfamiliarity of many people with the new system. A new county directory covering the entire system will be issued shortly. Meanwhile both directories are to be used.

The next exchanges slated for conversion to automatic switching are those at Tigard and Stafford.

LIBRARY NOTES

Have you read Drink to Yesterday, and a Toast to Tomorrow, two new books written by Adelaide Manning and Cyril Henry Coles. Drink to Yesterday is a spy book. No beautiful enigmatic Russian, no passwords and mysterious sign, but a straightforward description of a job of work, dangerous, nerve racking and sometimes brutal.

A Toast to Tomorrow covers the period from the close of the last war to the crisis at Danzig. We would like you to forget any ideas you may have about spy stories and approach this as a novel with humor, three dimensional characters, realistic narration and breath taking suspense.

Some people have real hard luck. Frank Ambrose, on Bertha-Beaverton highway, has had his share of it. Out of work for a long time, he secured work on the Front street job in Portland. Last week Thursday he was injured when ties fell on his legs and he is in a hospital badly injured. He has a wife and two small children.

Beaverton Rebekah lodge No. 248 met for their regular meeting Tuesday evening, June 17. Two candidates were initiated into the order. Refreshments of ice cream and cookies were served following the meeting. The tables were decorated in the lodge colors.

Huber Community club card party will be held Sat., June 21 at Huber hall.

Grangers Faced With Numerous Resolutions

Leading isolationists of the country, such as Senator Burton K. Wheeler, Charles Lindberg, Senator Gerald Nye and Representative Martin L. Sweeney of Ohio, were criticized severely by Palmer Hoyt, publisher of the Oregonian, Portland, in an address before approximately 1000 members of the Grange, meeting in annual convention at Newport.

Feature of the first day of the meeting was the annual address of State Master Ray W. Gill, who reviewed the effect of the present conflict in Europe upon American agriculture and urged All Out aid to Britain in order to insure a victory for the democracies.

Speaking at the Tuesday afternoon session, Governor Charles A. Sprague, reviewed various legislative matters affecting Oregon Agriculture.

Consideration of 21 resolutions before the convention was started Wednesday morning. The schedule of debating was interrupted Thursday afternoon when memorial services for deceased members was held. The convention which started Monday is scheduled to end Friday night.

Milwaukie has invited the State Grange to meet in that city in 1942 so that will be the site of the convention next year.

The following voting delegates were in attendance from Washington county:

Mr. and Mrs. J. LeRoy Mills, Washington Pomona Grange.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Whitaker, Hillsboro Grange.

Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Pennington, Winona Grange.

H. P. Strickler, Sherwood Grange.

Mrs. Lizzie Bauman, Gale Grange.

Sadie Loftis, Washington Grange.

Berenice E. Dobbins, Beaverton Grange.

Ethel M. Johnson, Scholls Grange.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Savik, Aloha Grange.

Mrs. Fred Grant, Dixie Mountain Grange.

Attend Rotary Convention

Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Schoene of Beaverton are in Denver this week attending the annual convention of Rotary International. Mr. Schoene is president-elect of the Portland Rotary club. Attendance reached around the 10,000 mark and Toronto, Canada, was chosen site for the 1942 convention.

WHITFORD

The regular monthly meeting of the local grange convened in all day session Saturday last with a good attendance of members and officers. Mr. Strickler from Sherwood was a visitor. The birthdays of Mr. and Mrs. Scott Funston and the visitors birthdays came this month. A birthday cake with candles adorned the table. The places at table were found by the date of each birthday being placed by the plate. Flag day was celebrated on the afternoon program.

Mrs. Louise Carter who has been visiting relatives returned to her home in Seattle Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Durbin of Salt Lake City visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Durbin Saturday evening. They left for California Sunday.

Sunday School was well attended. Three new members enrolled. Mr. Arnold of Portland recently from a university in Pennsylvania, delivered the ceremony and a young lady from Portland rendered a vocal selection. Arnold Garnett led in the singing and Fielding Denney conducted the hearing of memorized Bible verses.

Mr. and Mrs. Dick Heimpeke visited with Mrs. Heimpeke's father C. E. Gardner. They were sporting a new car.

WEST SLOPE

Work is progressing nicely on the new West Slope Water district building located just behind Hilbers Market. The structure will be used for board meetings, a superintendents office and as a warehouse for supplies. Completion is estimated about the middle of July. Henry Dahl is water superintendent.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hilbers spent Sunday with his parents in Portland, the occasion being in observance of Father's Day.

Indians of Early
Washington County

ROY L. DAVIDSON

When we think of the Indians encountered by the early settlers of Washington County, most of us are apt to get too much color into the picture. Too much war paint. It seems to be an impression gained by reading early day stories of the fiction type, and even some of our textbooks have left a rather lurid touch to the early day Redskins.

And of course some of the picture is true to life. There were plenty of massacres—too many in fact. The Idaho country is full of historic sites and monuments where early day massacres and Indian fights occurred.

Where wagon trains winding through the canyons and among the flat topped buttes were set upon from ambush, and ruthlessly cut to pieces, emigrants killed and their stock and supplies pilfered. But so far as Washington County is concerned, the picture was different. The Tualatins, a branch of the Calapooya tribe were always peaceful.

This does not mean that while your neck was safe that your property necessarily was. Indeed not; to the contrary there were numerous incidents where property simply vanished, and in most instances it had found its way into the camp of a Redskin. One of the favorite pastimes of the outlaw Indians was to hang about the rivers in the vicinity of crossings and steal canoes and boats. There were no bridges to speak of—it was either for the streams or boat across them. If the Indians could get the boat or canoes in his possession, then he stood a chance to get some prize for their ransom. Just an immature edition of present day big-shot kidnapping.

In these activities, the Indians were not entirely to blame for the example set by the white settlers was not conducive to perfect behavior on the Redskin's part. So far as the Indians were concerned it was a land grab of the first order. The white men took over the land that had been freely used by the Indians for many centuries and in most cases there was no consideration at all for the former owners. Turn about was fair play—that must have been what the Indians thought. At least they did a little grabbing in their own right.

Aside from the Tualatins, the county was also inhabited, or perhaps, patrolled would be the better word, by the Klickitahs, a nomadic tribe of hard riding, rough dealing redmen from North of the Columbia. They lived a hundred years too soon—they would have fitted admirably into Hitler's panzer divisions, for indeed, they actually used many of the tactics employed by the nazi dictator. Tiring of the confines of their regular habitat, which bordered the Columbia on the north side and extended from the region of Vancouver on the west to The Dalles region to the east, these restless nomads, mounted their tough steeds and began to push out for other worlds, in which to carry on their game quests. They were hunters of the first order and lived by the fruits of the chase. As they worked eastward towards the Walla Walla country they soon encountered the fierce Cayuse tribe, which gave plenty of trouble. They, too, were hunters and were not to be deprived of their range by the intruders. It was this warlike tribe, the Cayuses, who planned and carried out the Whitman massacre. This cannot be dealt with in this story, however in the near future, the part that an early day Washington county family played in that massacre will be given in a separate account, a harrowing adventure in which one member of the family lost his life and others were taken prisoners, to be later ransomed by the Hudson's Bay company.

Back to the Klickitahs. After receiving a setback to eastward aggression, they turned to the west and south, easily subduing the Chinooks, comparable to the Czechs or Poles. Then they crossed the Columbia and Willamette, took over the Tualatins, Calapooyas and Molallas. They had
