ious or dangerous animals or any animals running loose after dark, will be impounded by the marshal, who will notify owners. The fee charged will be $1 for cattle, horses or mules, 50 cents for swine and 25 cents for goats and sheep, with an additional charge of 50 cents per day for keep. An unruly vicious milk cow was a decided liability those days, when bosses had the run of the town if they were well behaved. There were no side streets, if you tried hard enough you could wade through the grass off Broadway, but that was all.

Later—it was 1912—W. E. Pegg was mayor, then, the City Fathers put through another traffic measure as follows: "Ordinance 24—September 1912—Any person who shall in the town of Beaverton, overload, overwork, torture, torment, deprive of necessary sustenance, beat or mutilate any horses or teams of horses, or permit to stand upon the streets, lanes or alleys, more than two consecutive hours, will be punished by not less than $10 or more than $100 or a jail sentence of not less than 10 or more than 50 days."

Nowadays they do not care how much you punish your vehicle, but they still like you not to leave it too long in one place, because somebody else may want the place. It's interesting to note that the first 25 ordinances in the Beaverton record books were written out in laborious longhand. And oddly enough the town was incorporated in 1893, but there seems to be no ordinances on the books before 1905, number 4 as given above just being enacted in 1906. What did the town do for government during the interim? Was everything so ideal that there was no occasion or need for passing any ordinances?

Looking over the town a bit more as it appeared in '06, there was Spraner's butcher shop—run by councilman A. H. Spraner, where the Studio barber shop is. Mr. Specht ran a grocery on the ground floor of a two story building on the bank site. On the northwest corner of First and Watson was a livery stable, operated by Henry Livengood, who was always glad to see the drummers totting their heavy cases way to hire a rig and "make" the stores of the surrounding communities. After they got back to town, they enjoyed a good meal, family style, at the hotel of Mr. Mitzel, on the site of Commercial Hotel.

Mr. Alberts had the flour mill. During the World War it was converted into a potato starch factory, now is used as fruit receiving station by McLaughlin canning company. Mr. Alberts' son, Clarence, and George Thyng carried on a pool hall and confectionery in the basement of the Grange hall, where Peggs' Undertaking parlors are.

The town had three greenhouses. Mr. Morton, right near Commercial Hotel location had one, Mr. Welter, who came from Chicago, about 1904, had the second hothouse and raised cucumbers and tomatoes for the Portland market. Third greenhouse was owned by Mr. Thronhauser who also raised vegetables for the markets. The man who pioneered horse radish culture was John Henry and of course the beaverdam swales were always planted to onions. Up opposite Hugh Lewis' Implement Business was another blacksmith shop—this one owned and operated by Paul Schmidt. The Methodist church stood on the same site as present, and the Catholic church, a small wooden building, also was located about where the present building stands.

The Congregational church was on First Street, just east of grade school—now occupied by Nazarenes. And the Seventh Day Adventists had a building on Cedar Street, right about where Jay Gibsons' residence stands.

"Mr. Cady the postmaster, had a warehouse for potatoes and grain in the same building where Mr. Findley now has his feedstore and warehouse. That is about all the different businesses in Beaverton according to some of the old-timers. Of course as people get older their memory gets rusty and doesn't work so well anymore, but even though they are all in memory, they were an important part in the early history and did a great deal in forming the foundation for a town now well known all over the state as a city of homes.

and exploitation by labor racketeers and others. Such raiding of ten is a body blow to the large organizations, but to the little fellow it may be a death sentence. I have in mind those compelled to pay needless employees who act as spectators on the job; or those forced to abandon processes where cost could be cut and quality improved by their adoption. Some business concerns have been caught and crushed in conflicts between rival unions. The policy of our defense program is to decentralize and spread production among many sub-contractors of medium or small size. Efficiency of such concerns will increase if they can be given their independence from the commands of ruthless labor dictators.
