Scrap Aluminum Campaign Opens Next Monday

"Beginning Monday, Washington county housewives will be trading old aluminum pots and pans for bombs in defense of America," C. T. Richardson, chairman of the county defense council, said this week in announcing the opening of the drive to collect scrap aluminum. Householders in all parts of Washington county are asked to scour pantry shelves, scrap heaps and garages to produce every manner of aluminum.

A special drive in rural areas is being organized in the county by William F. Cyrus, county agent, with Miss Kathleen McCrae, home extension agent in direct charge. Grange, Farmer Union, and 4-H club leaders will be appointed in the various rural communities. The drive will be conducted by Boy Scouts, civic clubs and patriotic groups.

Schedule for collection opens the campaign on Monday, July 21, and designates July 28-29 for the clean-up campaign, July 30, movement of the scrap material to state-wide centers will be begun by the State wide centers will be begun by the state highway department.

L. L. MacIntyre, county engineers has been appointed as chief in charge of transportation in the drive and will make the necessary plans for transportation.

Collection of scrap aluminum in the rural communities will be a feature of the week beginning July 21. This is a part of the national campaign headed by Mayor LaGuardia of New York, in which it is estimated that 20 million pounds of secondary aluminum with an approximate cash value of $1,500,000 can be recovered. This will provide sufficient aluminum or 2000 fighter planes.

Anything made of aluminum should be collected in the drive—pots and pans, radio parts, washing machine parts, measuring cups, kettles and double boilers, electrical appliances—in fact anything made of aluminum that is no longer needed or is worn out. Do NOT try to clean the metal, remove wooden handles or segregate other metal with which the aluminum may be combined.

Beaverton—Mrs. I. M. Walker, grange hall.

North Plains—Elsie—Leming, K of P. hall.

Kinton—Mrs. May Snider, grange hall.

Aloha—Mrs. L. C. Klatt, grange hall.

At Beaverton Leonard Adams can be reached for details of the drive.

People who have no transportation facilities, may call Dayton, McCready Lumber Co., or the City Hall and Boy Scouts will call for the contributions.

A public storage bin has been erected at Broadway and Watson streets. Toss in your contributions.

Ceremony Read At Beaverton

A bride of July 4 was Miss Theresa Catherine Kalibaba, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Kalibaba of Beaverton, whose marriage to George M. Mann, Jr., son of George Mann, took place at St. Cecilia's church at Beaverton.

The church was decorated for the service with white and pink gladiolus and larkspur, white snapdragons and palms.

The bride was lovely in a princess gown of white satin, made with long train. Pearls edged the neckline and a coronet of pearls held her tulle veil in place. She carried white carnations, white sweet peas and bouvardia arranged in a shower.

Mrs. Ann Ludwig, the bride's sister who was matron of honor, wore ice blue chiffon and carried a bouquet of pink sweet peas and bouvardia.

Charles Rust was best man and Bill O'Connor.

Assisting at the reception were Mrs. George Altshian, Mrs. George Kalibaba, Mrs. Louis Grutner, Mrs. Anne Temple and the Misses Lillian and Amelia Panantoni and Winifred Mann.

Mr. and Mrs. Mann will live to Portland when they come back from a wedding trip to California.

All Plants Need Care Now

Richey's Hardware and Furniture Co. are calling your attention to their ad this week to the Gipp's Scientifically balanced food for gardens and all plants. It contains vitamin B.

The soil during the hot weather becomes exhausted and needs food and lots of water to make plants grow.

They will continue the sale of garage cans until the stock on hand is exhausted. These are priced very low—buy now.

Past Noble Grands were the special guests of the evening. Preparations were made for initiation at the next meeting.

MAN'S BEST FRIEND

ROY L. DAVIDSON

"Why not write a story about him?" asked the lady. She came out to the front gate and pointed down the highway towards Tualatin.

I saw him then. He was lying on the gravel shoulder, not three feet from the edge of the blacktop; right where the highway swung in a sweeping curve between the steep fir wooded walls. One look was all it took to tell—the disheveled heap of his big frame, the sun's shaggy glint on the green things that hovered over him. "Man's best friend"

He was just a big brown brute; his hair was long and shaggy. He would never have taken a prize at the show ring, because his blood wasn't blue enough. He had no pedigree. But you couldn't hold that against him, for after all he had nothing to do with choosing his parents. The lady looked down at him. "Man's best friend," she said again.

Who did he belong to? Well now, she didn't know. But he lived some place along the road. And every day he liked to walk along the black ribbon of the highway, going in the direction of town and later back home again. He was never hurried. What of the black and green and red shiny things that purred by him were limited for time. He wasn't. He padded deliberately along, always on the very fringe of the blacktop; he never took more than a foot of it for his own. The rest, he left for the hurrying machines that were always short of time and space.

Sometimes they crowded him, sometimes they were so close that the explosive burst of expanding air fell like a cushion across his shaggy frame. He wagged his bushy tail. He wagged his bushy tail. They were his friends, these people in the flying machines. They were always in a hurry. But he trusted them. He trusted everybody. They were his friends and he theirs. "Man's best friend," the lady said.

He had passed her door for years now, the lady said. At first he was not so big as now, neither did he possess the dignity of late years. For he did not keep to the highway's rim altogether those days, but neither did he venture onto the forbidden surface towards the center. But there were mice and snakes and other small creeping things in the weeds along the border. What fun to forage there, especially in the coolness of the afternoon's shade, when the wall of firs cut off the sun! The lady kept on talking. "Man's best friend! But see how they treat him!"

She saw it happen from her place in the garden. The car swooped dizzily around the curve. Maybe it was accidental, maybe not. Some folks think it's smart to be tough, she said. Anyway there was a car coming around on his own little strip at the edge, just like he always did. edge, still he wasn't afraid. He never was. The car was crowding the edge, still he wasn't afraid, for he trusted everybody—they were his friends.

He didn't even cry out when the sickening thud came. When he was hurtled along the highways edge. Just for a moment he lay there in the wake of the streaking car, too stunned to move. Then he tried to get up. There was something wrong with his hind legs, they wouldn't work. He began to wobble and list about, for the first time in his life, his big frame was out of control.

And, of course the lady was on her way out through the gate, trying to reach him, to help him what she could. But she wasn't in time. For his helpless struggles brought him onto the forbidden surface—where he had never made bold to walk. And he couldn't get up; he couldn't get off the road when the next car shot around the curve. Perhaps the driver tried to miss him. Maybe not. Maybe he didn't care. The machine passed over the big shaggy body and his world must have spun dizzily for a moment before it turned completely black. Babson Believes Stocks To Be Very Cheap Now

Babson Park, Mass., July 18—It is not the function of this column to forecast the stock market. It is, however, my duty to give certain facts to readers. This week, these facts pertain to the stock market.

Prices Very Low

The dividend-paying stocks, listed on the New York Stock Exchange, are now selling at less than 14 times their dividends compared with nearly 20 times in August, 1939, and perhaps 27 times in August, 1929. This means that if you shut your eyes and blindly put a little money in every dividend-paying stock, you would get a yield of over 7%! With the exception of the 1917 break, the 1920-21 panic, and the 1931-33 depression at no time in the past 41 years have good stocks been so cheap in relation to dividends as today.

After the War? Four main reasons are given for these low prices:

(1) "Artificial good business is largely 'artificial' due to the War. There will be a severe and long business slump immediately after the War is over." My answer to this is that the first part of the statement is true; but not necessarily the second part.

A sharp drop may be expected directly after the coming armistice; but it should be short followed by a healthy reconstruction period which may last for some years. In this, the United States and Canada must take a leading part. Of course, unless some great new industry comes into being, the world must some day "pay the piper" but cannot fear of such now be laborer?

Frightened of Labor

(2) "Labor has the upper hand and is taking all the profits." To read the newspapers, one would think that 50% of the workers are out on strike. Statistics, however, show that, at the very worst, less than 1% of the workers have been on strike at any one time and less than 4% of those engaged in defense work. This percentage is too much Continued on Page 2

Harvest Queen Contest Takes on New Interest

Interest in the Harvest Queen contest for the Washington county fair shows signs of reaching a peak that of last year, Leon Davis, Fair manager announced this week.

Four girls already had completed their registration this week and were preparing their organizations for the campaign. Added to last week's list of candidates are Marjorie Will of Laurel, sponsored by the Laurel Scholls Farmer Union Juniors, and Rose Angela DiLoreto of Dixie Mt., sponsored by the Dixie Mountain Grange. Beatrice Hite, of Sherwood, sponsored by the Sherwood Grange was entered before.

Arrangements were going forward by the Hillsboro Junior Womens club for preparing the Queen Treasure chest, making arrangements for gowns and street clothing for the royal court, and planning the entertainment which will be presented at the coronation ceremony preceding the Queen's ball.

The chest which is to be presented by the Fair Board will be filled with items designed to delight the heart of the winning girl.

Although girls entering the queens contest are advised to obtain a sponsor, such action is not necessary. Any girl between the ages of 16 and 25 is entitled to obtain an entry blank at the office of the fair board in Hillsboro. Entries should be filed immediately however.
