LIBRARY NOTES

K by Mary Roberts Rinehart tells the story of a famous young surgeon who believing that he is the cause of several deaths, but which are really the result of a nurse who has a mean hateful disposition, the young doctor gives up his practice and goes away to a small village where he works in an office having nothing at all to do with medicine.

One day the village doctor is shot and when all hope is given up the young doctor recognized and performs a miraculous operation and saves the others life. How the story ends and the way it is told is told only as Mary Roberts Rinehart would do it.

HIGH WATER PANTS

When Campbell arrived that autumn morning, a snicker ran through the High School there in Southern New York State. Tall and lanky and in the early twenties he was and friendly enough when we came to know him. And he had intentions; he was fit himself to teach.

Yes, we laughed that first day, but in no time the laugh was on us. Being there for business, he made high grades from the start. And that being so, he was no problem to the faculty, as were the sons from some of the big places on the avenue. Our school was a cross section of High School America; enough desks seated the earnest kind who make good in after life and win laurels for our vast system of education.

This gives it—"The position our nation has in world leadership, is not one of resources alone, but is grounded and enforced by our educational system."—OREGONIAN. Our foundation is EDUCATION, then. At first glance it looks reasonable. And yet may not education be but a veneer that covers a perverse heart?

Two kinds of men have sailed to the lands beyond the seas. There is the chap who travels to India, say, to serve some old London house. We have heard of such, who when settled and in the routine, go after forbidden fruits in the foreign section. In time they send him home, a broken man, a moral wreck. What of education here?

Education is the handmaid of religion but of itself it can never hold back a nation from moral break-up. So we ask—If every man were like you what would the family be? And if every family were like yours, what would the nation be? Let us heed the President and pray for our country and having prayed, we have a right to sing—God Bless America.

St. Louis Notes

Hello Folks:
Yours truly is a passin' thru ole St. Louis now, today, Dec. 8th. I'm a gettin' back from ole Ohio and they have got me hooked to go back next fall. Their zero weather, snow, etc., shore put a sort of crimp in me but its a mighty fine country and mighty fine people. If you don't have to travel, why be shore to not try it now a days. R. R. connections impossible.

PGE Delivers the Power For Building "Commando" Barges
"The Yanks Have Landed"...
★ When you hear this news you can be pretty sure that "Commando" barges were in the action.
"Commando" barges are being turned out in Portland by Gunderson Brothers... who are relying on PGE to supply a steady, sure flow of electric power.
PGE is measuring up to its wartime assignment of pumping a quarter-million horsepower to war industries and other customers throughout a 2500-square-mile area. PGE is delivering 37% more power than three years ago.
PGE average rates continue to drop. Compared with 1934, the average home on PGE lines gets 52% more electricity per dollar! War industries on PGE lines enjoy power at rates that are among the very lowest in America... at rates even lower than those of many taxpayer-subsidized utility systems! PGE is demonstrating that free American enterprise measures up!
