Sandwich Fillers May Cause Illness

Here is a warning against the rather common practice of using meat or egg salad mixtures for sandwich filling in box lunches. There's danger of food poisoning unless such mixtures are kept cold, and if the lunch box is to remain in a warm office or war plant, conditions are just right for the development of the bacteria that cause food poisoning.

These days, when homemakers are packing lunch boxes for various members of the family, particular care must be taken not to include anything that won't stay fresh without refrigeration. If there's any doubt at all about this, it's much safer to use the meat plain, and to pack a plain hardcooked egg, rather than to make a salad out of either or both.

Small-Town Opportunities

Henry Ford may live to see a revival of his ideas for small factories and processing companies located in towns near raw materials and foodstuffs. When 30,000,000 war workers and 10,000,000 service men are demobilized, the larger cities will feel the effect of unemployment and depression the most. Plant owners and labor will fight over wage and production schedules just as they did in 1918-21. Hundreds of large city plants may be idle. It is possible for unemployment to reach new heights unless people return to their birthplace during the postwar period.

The smaller communities hold the key to solving the problem. The total population of small towns exceeds that of our large cities. If the businessmen, bankers, editors, farmers and other leading citizens of our small cities and towns can get together and operate, by themselves or through government loans, small and efficient plants they can absorb the unemployment slack. I anticipate that 75% of postwar unemployment will be taken care of by existing consumer goods plants and by reconverted war plants. Taking care, however, of the remaining 25% of unemployment may spell the difference between the American way of living and a more drastic planned economy.

World Markets Important
One of the biggest battles at the Peace Table will be over the question of tariffs, shipping and air routes. Whether we can long compete with certain other nations in the cost of growing and processing foodstuffs, in wage rates and in shipping costs remains to be seen. Foreign trade competition will be unprecedented after the War. To gain an edge on this, we can at least, while the War is on, assure ourselves of surpluses far and beyond our own needs. Foreign demands for our goods and services will be great and we must be prepared fully to meet them. To do this may require a temporary lower standard for wages and living for all groups. This would be better than unemployment.

No other nation is so fundamentally equipped to expand as we are. Control of the postwar world markets would put us at the head of the Peace Table regardless of any question as to whether we, England or Russia has done the most to knock out Hitler. But we can accomplish little without the industrial development and help of 80,000,000 consumer-producers of the American rural hinterlands. In the hands of this group—rather than our large cities—lies the physical salvation of much of the world and certainly the winning or the losing of the coming economic battle on our own postwar home front.

Advice to Young People
Several conclusions may be reached from the above analysis. The chief one is that those living in towns and small cities should stay where they are and not seek the large cities. Those now in the larger cities should plan to get back to their "home towns" just as soon as the War is over. Following World War II the best opportunities for both young and old will be on good farms and in spiritually minded small communities.

Oregon State College, Aug. 13—A change in opening and closing dates for the college terms here starting these dates have been announced to make these dates coincide with those used by the army for the 1400 ASTP students on the campus.

Under the new schedule opening of freshman week will be postponed to October 5, with registration of old students October 9. Winter term registration will be January 11 and spring term April 11. The change will also permit students to work longer in harvests this fall before returning to college.

To Get Application Blanks

Members of the Armed Services of the U. S. and of the United Nations who are eligible to use War Ration Book Three, will receive application blanks from their commanding officers beginning about August 15. Processing of these military applications and issuance of War Ration Three will be completed between August 15 and September 10. The book will not be needed for buying rationed commodities until after that time. It is estimated that approximately 700,000 men and women in the military service will be entitled to receive War Ration Book Three.

As a result of the pay-as-you-earn tax program it is estimated that the Bureau of Internal Revenue will have to have ten to fifteen thousand new employees. Most of the new employees will be placed in the various field offices.
