Fleas—An Annoying Household Pest
Fleas may present a serious problem if there are dogs or cats in the home, says Lois A. Lutz, Extension Specialist in Home Management. They have a tendency to quit their hosts from time to time and to seek shelter in rugs and upholstered furniture. These tiny insects annoy members of the family by attacking them and sucking their blood.
To control fleas, Miss Lutz continues, pay attention to both animals and the infested areas. The sleeping places of animals can be sprayed with a good household spray or treated with derris or pyrethrum powder. These powders are effective for sprinkling on the backs, necks and heads of animals to protect them from flea infestations.
If fleas are abundant in living quarters, scatter flaked naphthalene over the floor of each infested room at the rate of 5 pounds per room, advises Miss Lutz. Keep the room closed for 48 hours. The flaked naphthalene changes to a vapor which permeates the entire room killing the insects. Sweep clean and air well before using.

Overcharges Bring Fine
Alleged overcharges of $108 for retail sales and $64.81 wholesale cost Thayer's hatchery, Beaverton, W. A. Thayer, proprietor, payment to the United States treasury of $172.81 in settlement, the district OPA enforcement division Wednesday announced.
Thayer was selling drawn poultry at 63 cents a pound or 3 cents a pound above maximum prices allowed, OPA officials said, on broilers and fryers weighing over 1 1/2 pounds. The hatcheryman contended that he had followed a newspaper quotation in determining his prices.
Extent of the violation was determined by estimate in the absence of adequate records to cover transactions, it was explained. Thayer has a retail counter at his poultry farm and a wholesale business serving Portland restaurants.
No ceiling prices were posted, either retail or wholesale, and the only available records consisted of cash register receipts on retail business, enforcement officials reported.

Carelessness—or
Beaverton parents were glad when news came that the baby stolen from the hospital at Albany had been found. They rejoiced with the parents at its return. The guilty person will be punished as the law prescribes.
But what about the young children here, some under two years of age, who are allowed to play on the highways and streets? Time and again cars and trucks have had to stop to avert an accident by running down children on the highway.
Parents are criminally careless to allow children to roam wherever they want. Drivers of cars are oftentimes parents too.
Some day laws will be enacted to force parents to care for their children and keep them off the streets. Its not fair to the children or the autoist either.

One Traffic Death Reported Each Week So Far This Year
At least one traffic death was reported in Oregon every week during the first six months of this year, according to Secretary of State Bob Farrell, who quoted the figures in answer to the question, often stated, that restricted driving automatically resulted in a strong reduction in the traffic death frequency in Oregon.
The longest death-less day period in Oregon traffic during the first half of the year was the eight-day period April 23-30.
"An increase in the pedestrian fatality frequency is counter-balancing the decrease in fatalities involving the collision of motor vehicles or non-collision accidents," Farrell said. "Pedestrian fatalities now constitute nearly fifty per cent of the total traffic toll, whereas in normal times, they amount to around one-third."
Farrell urged pedestrians to accept the responsibility for their own safety in traffic by walking with greater care. Observance of traffic signals and avoidance of the dangerous practice of jaywalking are the two principal factors needed to reduce these pedestrian accidents, he said.
