Conservation of Critical Resources

Conservation of electricity is essential to victory because it means saving coal, oil, or gas used to produce it.

Saving of electricity releases manpower required for its production to other essential work.

Saving electricity means saving in critical materials such as copper, tungsten, and molybdenum used in light bulbs.

Individual savings of electricity may be small, but when undertaken by every person they can yield tremendous contributions in fuels, materials and manpower.

A 10 percent reduction in domestic and commercial use of coal for heating would save over 20,000,000 tons annually.

and commercial use of electricity would save over 4,000,000 tons of coal or its equivalent annually and more than 75,000,000 lamp bulbs.

By Fred P. H. Clyde

This publication assumes no responsibility for views expressed in this column. Sentiments are credited to the columnist, Clyde, and do not necessarily coincide with our editorial policy.

This last week I attended the meeting of the Oregon Ass'n. of Nurserymen. A delegation of Washington men were there with bells on.

Now you're probably wondering just where the nursery cuts any ice in this column. Let me tell you that this great Pacific Northwest is one of the most ideal plant producing areas on the American Continent.

Not only in fruit, nut and shade trees but in countless smaller plants that go to make mankind's daily life more full and pleasurable. Here are grown stock items of Evergreens, Azaleas, Rhododendrons, Camellias, Pansies, Primroses, Holly and myriad elsewhere hard-to-grow items that set the whole world to shame.

While at the meeting I saw Fred Borsch whose balcing brow looks better than mine—his has a glorious tan. Fred grows those rare Alpines that ought to have a guard over their precious persons. Then there was Brother Doerner of Doty and Doern-er who says your ignorant writer with rows and rows of Ornamentals that you and I'd give a couple of eyes to say we know of, not to speak have in our own backyards.

You always meet somebody at a bee like this that intrigues your imagination—his name certainly suggests flying windmills, wooden shoes, and canals through fields of Tulips—Van Der Bom. Kid Camellias to you.

This gent can go through a box of cigars like Grant went through Richmond and expends more energy telling you the inside and moving around in five minutes than I put out in two days. To say he is a dynamo is trite but it sure hits the spot.

I went out to his Camellia set-up and your blase' guy who thinks he's seen everything came out of those two glass houses so punchy he couldn't hit the floor with his hat.

First off I saw some mighty nice plants—thousands upon thousands of Camellias. Then I saw Camellias—not fruit trees—trained as Espaliers.
That is, not bushy, but in a lateral line so that they could be put up against walls, fences or even act as a growing division or boundaries for home gardens.

By this time Van had my tongue hanging out—but even with me down for the count he shows me one Ca-melia plant that had 75-count them—varieties budded on this one plant.
He had many that 4, 6, and 12 on some. Now it takes a good horticulturist to go that far.

But I missed one gent—I believe that he could run Van a mighty good race, not only did I consider him top steam engine Joe hereabouts but he was a number one candidate for local Azalea King. I refer to nowconvalescent—Ernie Riley who lives in Capitol Hill (Portland). Ernie not only ran a whopping big water district well but he was right in there a-pitching when they built up the fire house and the fire district that has meant so much to we folks out this way. Now you'd think that was enough but Ernie was a long strider and he finished off the rest of the deal with a beautifully landscaped home and an Azalea nursery that really was sump'n. Now there was nothing small about brother Rileys Azaleas. He sold them by the thousands at wholesale and retail. He had a nice greenhouse I'd sure like to have. Ernie was injured in car wreck several years ago. Any other man would never have come through.

But the old steam engine is coming right along—he gets around in the wheel chair pretty well and has hopes of doing even better. I believe he will—you don't keep guys like that down.

As much as my conceit hates to admit it—these guys and I have some differences. They tackle a lot of work—so do I. They get it done—I don't.

Headed for Los Angeles In November

Hello Folks:

Well, I am dated to go to Los Angeles in sunny California in the first part of November. Some old friends there got one of the churches to invite me to kum out and open the Good Book and talk to 'em about the Better Way of Life! This is not my first trip of this kind to California. So you see us "Oakies" aint all in bad with California! If I can get "Steinbeak" who wrote that dirty book, "Grapes of Wrath", to attend my "talks" I'll convert him so he won't lie so bad on us Sooner state folks!

I am hopin' I'll get some more invitations while out on the Pacific coast. I'll never forget while I wuz in Oregon a few years ago they published a tale on me that I counted 14 showers one day and fainted and they had to hunt up three buckets of dust in some old basement and throw it on me to bring me back to life again! Well, git your dust ready if you invite me to Oregon again!

electricity is the lifeblood of war production Artificial lightning flashes from these three giant electrodes melt the metal to make great castings for Liberty ships and aircraft carriers. This single electric steel casting furnace in Portland uses as much electricity every day as 2,400 typical homes.

don't waste it...

To win the war we cannot waste anything. Least of all can we afford to waste the irreplaceable man-hours required to produce electricity. Conservation is the responsibility of everyone of us. In the northwest there is ample power for all necessary purposes; however, the government asks every family and every business to avoid all waste. War industries need all the available materials, man-hours, and power.

PGE is pumping a quarter-million horsepower to war industries and other customers. PGE supplies the power for electric welding equipment, electric steel casting furnaces, power-driven machinery, cranes, and hundreds of other war plant operations. In addition, PGE supplies electricity for the lamps which make it possible for men and women to do precision work on the all-important night shifts.
