To Help Fight Polio

Neta Daly Chairman Women's Division in County

The fight against infantile paralysis is drawn to special public attention at this time of each year, however there is a group of women in this community who are waging a year around battle against the dreaded disease.

In Washington county these home-front soldierettes are led by Neta Daly, Beaverton, chairman of the women's division in this county.

Miss Daly and her staff of volunteer workers are carrying on a year around fight against infantile paralysis in this area. Half of the money raised through the annual March of Dimes will stay in this section to provide the aid required by polio victims regardless of age, race, creed or color.

Miss Daly and her committee work in cooperation with state and county rehabilitation agencies on assisting handicapped polios to become self-supporting.

Rev. Frances Sturtevant is chairman of the Beaverton district, which includes Progress and Hiteau.

From Congressman Homer D. Angell

I just recently returned from a short trip to England and Scotland during the recess of the Congress and had an opportunity to discuss with various Englishmen as well as Americans now stationed in that area, the whole war problem which is confronting us.

The English have what is virtually universal conception, which according to their reports to me, is working satisfactorily in their country and is enabling them to solve many of the problems which have been irritating us here in the United States.

One having an opportunity to see first-hand the devastation that has been wrought in London and the surrounding area by enemy bombs, is impressed by the great fortitude and strength of character of the English people. Whole areas of London proper have been completely destroyed, either by enemy bombing or by fires which followed. There are few districts in London that have escaped completely this devastating assault.

In the immediate vicinity of the hotel where I was staying, near the Marble Arch entrance to Hyde Park, which is near the center of the shopping district, bombs fell on four sides of the hotel, not however, dropping in the immediate vicinity of the hotel itself. This bombing was mostly during the early part of the bombing attack upon London. However, only a few days before my arrival, a rocket bomb hit in the immediate vicinity a little over a block from the hotel, resulting in great destruction to surrounding buildings and much damage to the leading department store in London.

Thousands of London families have been made homeless and practically no new construction has taken place to replace the homes that have been destroyed by the bombs and fires following. Those who lives were saved meet the difficulty by being taken in by friends or relatives or doubling up in existing quarters. In addition thousands without homes are sleeping at night in the subways surrounding the areas where their homes formerly stood. While I was in London the subways at night were crowded with men, women and children taking refuge in the underground space available in the entrances to the subway trains. They brought their bedding and personal belongings, stayed through the night and vacated the premises in the morning.

The English people, in spite of the terrific beating they have taken, are of good cheer and are united in their stolid determination to continue on with the war until final victory. They are deeply appreciative of the help our country is giving them, and particularly in joining as an ally on common ground in fighting enemies seeking to destroy civilization itself. They are supplying our forces with much material, food-stuffs, munitions, quarters and services under reverse lend-lease.

I was able during this visit to get much first-hand information from our own men as well as from our English allies on the problems facing us on the conduct of the war, which will be of service in the days ahead in my work in the Congress. Later I will discuss in my news letter more in detail our activities in the prosecution of the war which I was able to see in my trip through England and Scotland and particularly the work being done in our hospitals for the care and rehabilitation of servicemen injured in battle.

Enlarging Quarters

The Findley Milling Co. have just finished enlarging their office on Front Street and are now adding a large room and display for a package room and display of brooders.

They are adding more feed and will carry a large stock of feed for growing chicks.

Awaiting Orders

Amid the shattered buildings of a town on the Italian front, a jeep of a medical unit and an M-4 tank wait side by side for orders to move forward. Help these men save American lives by buying at least an extra $100 War Bond today.

These Are Busy Days At Capitol

Liquor, a controversial problem, whether you do or you don't, consumed much of the time of the Legislature during the first week of the 33rd Legislative Session.

Democrats of the Senate, attempting to make a political issue of the proposed investigation of Oregon's Liquor Control Commission's 1943 business dealings, were quickly squelched by the Senate majority, which promptly passed SJ4, a resolution requested by Governor Snell for the investigation. The President of the Senate paid high tribute to Washington County by appointing Senator Paul Patterson as one of the two Senators to serve on the Committee. The other Senator is Angus Gibson of Lane and Linn Counties. It was generally felt at the Capitol that there would be no "whitewash" insofar as the Senate members were concerned.

Milk was also a matter of consuming interest during the first week. Proposed pasteurization legislation was quickly buried after Oscar Hagg of Reedville appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and the House Food and Dairy Products Committee. Hagg maintained that laws covering production of dairy products should remain under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture and that no material changes be made due to the fact that pasteurization facilities will not be available until after the war is over.

Members of Washington County delegation to the Legislature have not as yet proposed any bills. The so-called "chicken" bill passed by the last Session of the Legislature for the benefit of Washington County poultrymen, and vetoed by the Governor, will probably be filed in the House this week by Representative Hesse and others interested in providing reimbursement to poultrymen for losses due to destruction of poultry by dogs.

Tigard Man Victim of Hit and Run Driver

Warren Thomas, 52, Tigard, died at a Portland hospital Sunday after being picked up unconscious on a road near Beaverton, state police report.

His body was sent to Pegg's Funeral home, Beaverton.

Funeral services were held Thursday at Pegg's Chapel for Warren Thomas, aged 52. Interment was in Crescent Grove cemetery.

Surviving are sisters Angelene Schultz, Betty Powers and Gertrude Schackman, also Ann Forcier.

According to police reports Mr. Thomas had been talking to a man in a car and had stepped out directly in the path of an oncoming car. The parties in this car were exonerated from blame.

A marriage license has been issued to W. M. Arrington, Hillsboro, and Mary Elizabeth Brown, Beaverton.

The windows of a retail store are their greatest appeal to the public. That is why retail stores keep them "prettied up" and change them often.

But it remained for a woman to really take advantage of a peculiar use of the street to make her window so attractive that every passing automobile or person coming up Watson street and turning into Broadway were attracted to her windows. She simply placed a large looking glass in the window and the lights of the cars shining on the glass attracted attention by the flash. The same thing happened when the sun shone on the glass, it immediately attracted attention. Have you noticed it too?

Mrs. James Lovett of Seattle has been visiting her husbands parents, the Walter Lovett's and left Sunday morning for San Francisco to join her husband who is a marine and now in port.

Mrs. R. B. Denney is in a Portland hospital recovering from an operation.

Outlook For Rail Stocks

Babson Fears They Are Too High

Babson Park, Fla., Jan. 19—Wall Street is always too bullish or too bullish. These brokers are honest, but very temperamental. Two years ago, when railroad stocks were selling for 30% of their present prices, the average Wall Streeter would not touch them. Today, at three times those 1942 prices, they are urging that rails be purchased.

Advantages of the Rails

Many good things can be said for the railroads. They have done a wonderful job during the war and are entitled to much credit. Many of the roads have reduced their debt or now have large bank accounts. Also, they have a better standing with the government because they have demonstrated they are essential to winning the war. The U. S. will henceforth protect its railroads as a part of any program for military preparedness.

It also should be remembered that the railroads must, to some extent, share in any prosperity ahead. If we are to have a postwar national income of from $100 to $120 billions a year, the railroads' postwar gross earnings must exceed their prewar earnings. This I believe is possible, but I ask, "Have the prices of most railroad stocks and income bonds not already more than discounted this?"

Disadvantages of the Rails

The gross earnings of the railroads will, however, not increase proportionately to the national income. The railroads will have much more competition after the war than before. The new great pipe lines which have been built will take away much of their oil business. The resumption of both coastwise shipping and river transportation should materially reduce the earnings of such roads as Atlantic Coast Line, Seaboard and Illinois Central. Southern Pacific, Alchison and other continentals will suffer from the opening of the Panama Canal. Also they will have more airplane and bus competition.

Most railroads are today in poor shape physically. They must spend billions after the war—not only for
