The telephone cable is a vital link in a telephone system

When storms strike and utility lines go down, or when new construction is extending the magic net of telephone service, the cable splicer is on the job. These cables contain as high as 3,000 wires which must be carefully matched and joined according to code.

This takes patience, skill and precision.

A trained army of skilled engineers and service personnel is constantly alert to your needs in keeping our service the finest in the nation. In stormy weather or fair, service is their watchword.
