Needs Of Rural Education Seal Country School Fate

McKAY PRINCIPAL CITES TREND TOWARD MORE MODERN FACILITIES AT LESS COST

ELMER F. JACKMAN

Rural areas are facing a revolution in organization of their country school districts. The country school, long cherished institution, is fast disappearing.

The new schools will have modern facilities that includes hot lunches and janitor service. They will have lower per pupil costs, because of larger enrollment. Above all, they will have good teachers who are trained for elementary and rural work and who want to teach in that community's school.

Why all the changes? What has brought about the revolution? Here are a few of the reasons:

There has been a decided increase in the number of school children, a shortage of qualified teachers. Most of all, many younger farmers and their wives demand that their children have an education as good as the education provided for children in towns and cities.

The most crying need is for teachers. In the last few years our schools have lost 350,000 qualified teachers. Many teachers are teaching on emergency certificates. This means that they cannot pass regular certification requirements. Our state superintendent of public instruction tells us that the situation is still serious and no hope for immediate relief is in sight.

If you have ever served on the school board, you know how hard it is to get and hold good teachers in rural areas. This is not only because they are paid low salaries, but because they face a more difficult task of teaching in the country than in town. Various surveys show that the average school teacher lacks teaching facilities. The teacher often faces disinterested school boards, hard to get along with. There is a lack of comforts and most schools do not have inside toilets and running water.

Even with record farm income of 1946-47, teachers in country schools were paid lower salaries than teachers in other schools.

This movement has caused considerable uneasiness among some farmers because consolidation of elementary schools almost always means the closing of the country school and the need for transportation to larger schools. Many farmers do not want this to happen and while resistance to reorganization is waning many are still opposed to consolidation.

Many parents do not like the idea of sending their children to town schools. They are afraid the children will be educated away from the farm, and that they will be thrown with undesirable associations and exposed to new temptations. Farm parents do not like to have children riding for long periods every day on the bus. They have questions about safety and discipline, even if the bus service is reliable and convenient. Modern school buses are safer than to have children trudging to and from school along the highway.

In spite of all objections, this country is in the process of a country school district reorganization revolution. The small, inefficient, ineffective one-room schools are disappearing rapidly. One thing we must make doubly sure is that school district reorganization is carried on a democratic basis.

The country community will then be able to provide a complete educational program which will include language, social studies, mathematics science, the arts agriculture industrial arts, homemaking business education, health education, recreation, understanding the other fellow and get along with him. Through reorganization, many special services can be provided, including health clinics, special education for handicapped children vocational guidance, adult education, community recreation, school-community libraries and safe transportation.

Is this too much to expect? Urban children have these advantages and take them for granted. Should country children be denied them? Can we live up to our promise to provide equal educational opportunities for all children, farm and city? I think we can.

SURE of full value in good-eating meat because...

...you get meats of guaranteed quality, trimmed waste-free before weighing. See, in the diagram at left, what this means when you buy a standing rib roast. Although many markets cut rib roasts from seven ribs, Safeway rib roasts are cut from only the first five tender ribs. These are cut seven inches long. The less-tender end is lopped off to be sold as short ribs at a lower price. The heavy chine bone is also removed. Result: you pay for just that part which is suitable for oven-roasting . . . the tender center portion. Every cut of meat you buy at Safeway is correctly prepared for cooking before it is weighed. For meats, as for all foods, be sure...shop SAFEWAY.
