Varied Vacation Outlets at Gov't. Camping Grounds

Among the vacation outlets available through use of the public camping grounds maintained by the government, Oregonians may enjoy fishing, mountain climbing, berry picking, horse-back riding or general outdoor fun and relaxation.

Included in this week's listing of campground facilities which are offered for public use by the government, is a representative list of nearby, Willamette basin outing sites which include a varied list of possible holiday outlets.

Although campfire permits, in the parks named, are not required, visitors are cautioned to use extreme care in disposing of cigarettes or other burnable items.

PIONEER SETTLEMENT BOASTED NEWSPAPER, FLOUR MILLS, MAIL DELIVERY AND FARMS

By Hervey S. Robinson

A hundred years ago today, in what is now Oregon, life was rugged and elemental. Men of vision, at their time of history-making, towered nobly in the area but even they were driven and beset by the doubts and pessimisms that overshadowed their lives and efforts.

A picture of pioneer days, taking the Tualatin valley as its subject, is an illustration in point.

One of the four original districts created by the provisional legislative committee, in 1843, Tuality was five years old when Reverend George Atkinson, Congregational missionary and educator, arrived. He found a pioneer settlement whose beginnings were firmly rooted and the settlers had truly established the foundations of a permanent home.

There were many farms, a semi-monthly newspaper-magazine, a privately supported mail delivery system, flour mills and an orphan school which was destined to become a thriving university.

Yet, with all the brave trails so blazed throughout a primitive wilderness, one heavy cloud hung low.

As Dr. Atkinson reported: "An immigrant will come in during the autumn, put up a log house, with mud and stick chimneys, split boards and shingles. He will break eight or ten or twenty acres and sow it to wheat."

"You call upon him the next year and he will have a fine field, ripe for the sickle. His large field will be well-fenced, with newly split fir rails. There will be a patch of corn. Another of potatoes. Another of garden vegetables. Outside his cultivated acres will be a large piece of land broken for the present year's sowing.

"His cattle, horses and hogs will be on the prairie, thriving and increasing without care. A few sheep will be around the house. He has a spring near.

One of his children will be sent away 4 or 5 or 10 miles to a private school taught by some young man or woman at $3 or $4 a term for each scholar. His wife has few cooking utensils, few chairs. All household furniture had been brought from the States.

"He takes a claim or buys it, and will only raise wheat and grain. He will make no improvements in his house until he knows whether or not Congress will allow his claim."

The present-named Columbia river was first navigated in the name of the American flag by Captain Robert Gray, in 1792. Since that first acquaintance, the people of the expanding United States had clamored for more information.

Yet, Oregon was like a strange, foreign country, lying beyond a rugged barrier, the Rocky Mountains. Inter-coastal navigators and cross-country explorers slowly led the vanguard of immigrants to the Pacific coast but territorial possession had shifted back and forth between the English and the United States as their respective interests sought to establish domination.

There were traders, adventurers, school teachers, merchants and soldiers of the Cross who came, one after another, into the Pacific Coast wilderness to meet the varied fates of wealth, an established home or death at the hands of angry, home-defending Indian tribe. Yet, as one faltered and fell, scores stepped in.

Settlers came by sea and by land. The pulse of westward settlement stirred, strengthened and became a romantic and challenging evidence of national growth. The staggering hurdles of topography held back the major migrations until, in 1842, "the determination of the settlers overcame officials' frowns.

Lead is absolutely vital telephone service. Today it would require a pole 1000 feet high to hold all of the connecting telephone wires now placed in a single 3-inch lead-covered cable.

Lead continues to be in short supply with vital atomic research having first claim. The telephone industry like other industries receives only a rationed quota.

Our expansion program, although proceeding at a fast pace, would be completed even faster if it were not for this continued shortage of vitally needed lead.
