Steve J. Dean

Steve J. Dean, father of Mrs. Lee Wells, 1009 S. W. Hazel ave., Beaverton, died suddenly on Friday evening, the day after he had arrived here from Cairo, Ill., for a visit with his daughter. Death was attributed to a heart attack.

Mr. Dean was born on September 26, 1888, in Cairo, Illinois. He was a veteran employee of the Illinois Central railroad there and had long planned this trip to Beaverton to visit his daughter. His wife was unable to make the trip, but a son, Robert and a daughter, Mrs. Billy Love came out with him for the visit.

His remains were sent back to Cairo for services and interment. He is survived by his wife, Louise at Cairo; two sons and two daughters: Robert Dean of Cairo, Ill.; Stephen W. Dean of Cairo; Mrs. Billy Love of Charleston, Missouri and Mrs. Lee Wells of Beaverton.

Joe Smith of the Ideal Food Market in Cedar Mills welcomed his wife home this week, with open arms, following her month long absence while she visited her family in Minnesota. Seems that working in the store and running the household was a little too much for Joe.

New owners of the Cycle Shop on Farmington road near Florence's Sewing Center are E. L. Bailey and James Kinkade, both of Portland. The new owners have had many years experience in the cycle business.

HEALTH FOR ALL

At one time, people usually connected the word "rehabilitation" with the training of a crippled war veteran for a useful occupation. Nowadays, people realize that rehabilitation is an integral part of the treatment and cure of many illnesses, whether caused by accidents or diseases.

For example, rehabilitation is an extremely important part of the "total restoration to useful living of patients with such serious chronic diseases as tuberculosis.

Rehabilitation of the tuberculous was once thought of as separate from the treatment of the patient's physical illness and the process was not begun until the physical disease was arrested. Today doctors believe that the rehabilitation process should start at the time the diagnosis is made.

It is a shock for any person to learn he has tuberculosis and he needs help in accepting the diagnosis and learning to "live with his illness." It has been proved that such prompt attention to the patient's first reactions and emotional difficulties make the entire curing process easier for both doctor and patient. The doctor is frequently assisted in these early steps of rehabilitation by the public health nurse in the community and possibly by the services of a medical social worker.

At the sanatorium, where rehabilitation services continue, the patient is helped to understand that full cooperation with his doctor and the sanatorium physicians is vital to his cure. It is easier for him to cooperate when it is made clear that, although his illness may take time and patience, he can again become a self-supporting individual in employment to which he is personally inclined as well as physically suited.

All rehabilitation services at the sanatorium are aimed at helping the patient understand his illness and its treatment, and at preparing him to take up his activities in community life after his discharge.

While many tuberculous patients return to their former occupations, there are some jobs which might prove too great a physical strain for a patient after his illness is arrested. When necessary, the patient is able to begin training in the sanatorium for a type of work which is in keeping with his physical strength as well as his preferences. In many sanatoriums, the tuberculous patient receives expert guidance to help him discover new interests and skills, the pursuit of which will make life for him more enjoyable and perhaps even more remunerative when he is able to leave the sanatorium.

After holding the regular second public hearing 8 a. m. July 23, the Oregon State Game Commission made the final hunting regulations for 1949. The regulations were set as previously announced in the tentative regulations with five relatively minor changes. The changes made were as follows:

Carl Hill, chairman of the recently appointed Oregon State Game Commission, announced late Saturday that the commission had appointed Charles A. Lockwood to the position of State Game director, the term to run through December 31, 1949. In making the announcement, Mr. Hill stated that in their brief review of the departments and personnel the members of the new commission were favorably impressed, but they desired time to more fully familiarize themselves with all activities before taking permanent action.

Mr. Lockwood was Oregon state game supervisor under the old law that expired as a result of the new one passed by the last session of the Oregon legislature.
