The answers to everyday insurance problems*
By Leonard Adams

QUESTION: We've carried a fire insurance policy on our home and furniture for many years. The policy must soon be renewed and we think some changes should be made in it. Some of the insured property has become almost worthless while some of the things, including the home itself, have greatly increased in value. What should we do to arrive at an accurate figure?

ANSWER: First call in your insurance agent for an appraisal of the house, then make a complete inventory of your furnishings and personal effects. Be very thorough. You'll find the job won't take as long or be so arduous as you think. That inventory and the insurance policy, after it has been issued, should, if possible, be kept in a safe deposit box. Then, if you ever have a fire, you can check against the inventory and determine your exact loss.

* If you will address your own insurance questions to this office, we'll try to give you the correct answers and there will be no charge or obligation of any kind.
