Victims Of Cold Get Little Pity; So Many Of 'Em

Although he obviously suffers, with his running nose and eyes, sneezing and coughing, a cold victim probably gets less sympathy than any other ill person.

One reason may be that most people average two or three colds a year and most people look on a cold as just a temporary nuisance. Another reason for this lack of sympathy might be that people realize a cold is catching and so they avoid the sufferer. The person who carelessly spreads his cold germs by neglecting to cover his coughs and sneezes with his handkerchiefs or tissues is especially unpopular.

For the so-called "common cold" is highly contagious. The victim most frequently spreads his cold at the time the symptoms first appear, but his cold can be spread even before he himself starts coughing and sneezing.

The cold germ—a virus so small it cannot be seen under an ordinary microscope—is usually spread by direct contact. Things like sitting in a draft and getting wet feet are not sufficient in themselves to produce a cold. But doctors believe that sudden changes in temperature and severe chilling or wetting sensitize the membranes of the nose and throat and make a person more vulnerable to cold germs. Cold germs can lodge beforehand in the membranes of the nose and throat and not "take hold" until sudden chill or cold weakens surrounding tissues.

A cold, of itself, is never the cause of death. If neglected or ignored, however, a cold can lead to serious illness or complications which may prove fatal. Colds not properly cared for can result in pneumonia, tonsillitis, diseases of the ears and of the throat, or secondary infections of the sinuses, larynx, bronchial tubes and even the eyes.

The best way to avoid a cold is to avoid those suffering from colds. But since this is not always practical, the best defense is building natural resistance to all illness, mainly through proper diet and sufficient rest.

If a cold does strike, despite precautions, a person should get as much rest as he can, and take light and easily-digested foods, such as soups, milk, and fruit juices. If possible, he should stay at home. Prompt action against the early symptoms of a cold can mean "licking" it in a few days and perhaps warding off a serious illness that might have struck had the cold been ignored and the body's resistance further weakened.

Coaches Endorse Fast Treatment By Chiropractors

Oregon chiropractors have threatened to appeal to the state board of control unless the Oregon School Activities association abandons its discriminatory policy against chiropractic physicians in the high school athletic insurance program.

Meeting in the Multnomah hotel Thursday night, a committee of the Oregon Association of Chiropractic Physicians heard a Portland high school coach declare the majority of coaches prefer to have injured players treated by chiropractors because "they give them immediate relief and get them back into action quicker."

Paul Bennett, Franklin high school football coach, said that the chiropractic treatments given his players by Dr. Gordon V. Peffley "made the difference between having a first division instead of a second division team."

"Dr. Peffley, whose services were donated because the School Activities association refuses to pay for treatments of chiropractors, took care of nine injured players on my Franklin team, and got them all back in the lineup within one week."

He said it had been his experience that when injured athletes seek treatment from medical doctors for sprains or dislocated bones, they are told to "go home and soak it in hot water and come back in two weeks and we'll see what it looks like."

Statements were read from a number of other high school coaches throughout the state, who strongly recommended that chiropractic physicians be recognized in the insurance program.

Spokesmen of the Chiropractic Association said they had been turned down consistently in their efforts to arrange a conference between their group and the Oregon School Activities association, which manages the athletic insurance program. They said that Thomas Pigott, executive secretary-treasurer of the OSAA, had been "extremely uncooperative" about giving the chiropractic physicians a chance to state their case before his Association.
