Wind Break Trees Require Care In Growth Success

Unlike Topsy, trees do not "just grow."
If you are one of several hundred farmers who have received tree seedlings this year from the state department of forestry nursery, or elsewhere, don't make the mistake of "planting and forgetting" them as soon as they are in the ground.

This tree planting reminder is from Charles R. Ross, OSC extension service farm forestry specialist, who says trees planted for windbreak purposes require care. He suggests that the area prepared before planting, be fenced against livestock and that the seedlings be watered the first year or so even if a bucket or tank wagon must be used.

In cases where trees have been ordered and soil preparation and fencing have not been completed, Ross offers this alternative: hill them in a garden row for a year or two. They will grow nicely there, he points out, and will lose little growth while waiting to be planted permanently a year hence.

Type of windbreak usually recommended for eastern Oregon is one containing three rows. Facing the wind, a low growing line of shrubs or low trees to intercept ground winds is suggested. To extend the zone of protection—normally 8 to 10 times the height of the windbreak—a taller second, or middle tree row variety is recommended. For the inside or "seal" row, Ross suggests conifers having a dense foliage.

Once established over a period of one or two years, trees may be grown in windbreaks in areas with 10 inches or less annual rainfall. At the Sherman Branch experiment station, Moro, for example, 30 different kinds of trees and shrubs are growing satisfactorily in an area which receives less than 11 inches of annual rainfall. They are not watered.

Child Labor Law Protects Youth In Agriculture

Amendments to the child labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act (Federal wage and hour law) now give children in agriculture the full protection of the Act during school hours if the crop is for interstate commerce, Madison R. Smith, investigation supervisor of the Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Divisions, U. S. Department of Labor, in Oregon and Idaho, points out.

"Within the next few weeks, many children will be taken out of classrooms to help with the spring farm work," he said at his headquarters, 313 U. S. Court House, Old, at 520 S. W. Morrison street.

"If the farm produces crops for interstate commerce, and is not the home farm, prospective employers are warned that regulations regarding employment of children under 16 years old in agriculture are different than they were last spring.

"Before the wage and hour law was amended, employment of such children on farms was permitted when the child was not legally required to attend school. Now, children under 16 may be employed in agriculture only outside of the school hours for the school district where they are living.

"The new provisions do not prevent employment of such children during school vacations, on holidays or after school hours. Nor do they interfere in any way with the right of a parent to employ his own child on the home farm. They apply only to employment on farms, other than the parents' farm, that produce crops for interstate commerce."
