State Forestry Dep't Hires 1,000 Watching Fires

Over 1,000 men will make up the protection personnel of the state forestry department and its co-operating protective associations during the present forest fire season, according to Forest Spaur, state forester.

According to the forester these men will form the core of the organization set up to protect approximately 13 million acres of timberlands coming under the state supervision. The men will be established in their field positions by the first of July and include office personnel, permanent employees, emergency fire camp crews, wardens, smokechasers, lookouts, headquarters crews and maintenance crews.

Preparatory step in getting this large organization into shape for the season's work was made by a series of training schools which was initiated by an instructor's school held in the Salem office. At that time the various men were given instruction in the methods of conducting the schools in the field, how to instruct and what to instruct. Don Maus, forest training officer, handled the instruction and establishment of the fire schools for the forestry department.

Administration of the schools was handled by the various forest protective districts throughout the state. In general, the schools are divided into two units; one advanced class for the seasoned and experienced fire personnel and another for the new men who are being given training in the basic requirements.

Classroom work consists of instruction in the various phases of protection, including a brief statement of the policy of the state forestry department, cooperative features of the work, motion pictures and studies of fires and fire control.

Field training is also given in map reading, the job of the lookout, how to locate a fire, with an actual problem of using a compass to locate a simulated fire, fire line construction, the use of the axe and similar work necessary in carrying out the summer work.

All the men in the various emergency camps throughout the state will go through a period of conditioning which will include wood cutting, trail construction, telephone line work and work of a similar nature.

The Salem office of the state forestry department has gone on a 24-hour day and is ready to cooperate in all critical situations in sending out men to aid in directing the fire fighting or to send needed equipment.

State Forester George Spaur said that the fire fighters would be fully armed with mechanized equipment, be all of the latest improvements and devices to make fire fighting more successful and efficient.

Spaur pointed out that during the recent flare up of fires in late May and early June, 22 bulldozers, 50 power saws and dozens of tank trucks were used on one particular blaze. During the fire, many miles of fire breaks were constructed and more than 15,000 snags were felled by private and state forestry crews.

"TOWN HALL" PLAN FEET! Bend junior chamber of commerce members came up with an idea of having the national organization officially sponsor a nationwide "Town Hall" forum plan which it took back to the national convention in Chicago.

The PILOT records this plan of getting the issues before the public met with short treatment. In fact, the idea never got past the resolutions committee to the convention floor.

Various Jaycee spokesmen promised, however, that they would undertake the program unofficially, even if the national group could not see its merit.
