Adv. Tells Only Half of Freight Car Situation

"The Southern Pacific is telling only half the story of the freight car shortage," H. V. Simpson, executive vice president of the West Coast Lumbermen's Association charged here today.

"In a recent advertisement published in many Oregon newspapers," Simpson stated, "the Southern Pacific says that 21,000 new cars have been put in service in the five years since the war, but fails to state that they have retired approximately 17,000 old-age cars during that period."

"W. W. Hale, vice president of the Southern Pacific, who signed this advertisement," the lumber leader declared, "has stated that the increase in number of cars owned by the Southern Pacific is 3%. He fails to point out that the increase in traffic on this line, in the past ten years according to Interstate Commerce Commission reports, has varied from 45% to as high as 83% a year in that period."

Simpson said the advertisement also states that the freight car shortage is national, but fails to mention that the shortage on Southern Pacific Lines is far more acute than on the lines of any other carrier.

He said increased buying by consumers, increased production for national defense, increased military movements to Korea, movement of grain, labor controversies, and the 5-day week mentioned in the advertisement have affected all railroads, but only the Southern Pacific has failed so miserably to supply service.

Admittedly the demand for lumber has exceeded previous years, Simpson agreed, but this same demand affected the 75% of national lumber production not on the Southern Pacific, which received reasonably adequate service, as well as the 25% on the Southern Pacific, which received thoroughly inadequate service.

The cooperation asked by the Southern Pacific in their advertisement, Simpson pointed out, has been generously extended by Oregon shippers, but cooperation will not create cars that do not exist.

"There can be only one conclusion," the lumber leader said flatly, "and that is the Southern Pacific does not have adequate equipment to properly service the industries on its lines."
