CURRENCY OF PHILIPPINES. Perplexing Problem Which the United States Must Solve.

> That the people of the Philippines should ave a currency—an American currency of their own-is very generally admitted, but to provide that medium is one of the perplexing problems with which Congress is now confronted.

The business of the Orient demands of silver coinage, yet the fluctuations of that metal make it a speculative commodity in the hands of bankers in Manile and the Chinese ports. Having the power to fix the value and legal tender qual ity of whatever coins it may see fit to issue within its own jurisdiction, the United States may be able to overcome this difficulty in the Philipipnes by the issue of a special coinage, as proposed. In this connection an account of the existing coins in the Philippines, prepared by the Division of Insular Affairs.

Department of War, is matter of timely archipelago is the Mexican silver dollar or peso of 416 grains of silver of the fineess of .902. The Spanish government issued a Filipino peso in 1897 which has circulated with the Mexican dollar. The Spanish coin contains less silver than the Mexican deliar, but it is still in circulation, though it constitutes but a small percentage of the silver in use in the islands. Formerly the exchange value of the Mexican dollar, fixed by the Philippine Commission, was 50 cents. It is now $2.10 for $1 gold. Business in the Philippines is conducted with the following formidable array of coinage: The Mexican dollar, the Spanish-Filipino peso, the Filipino half dollar, peseta (25 cents), half peseta (16 ents), copper cuartos and centavos. The cuarto is 1-160 of a dollar and the centavo, 1 cent. Then they have the Halkwan tael worth 38 cents, the silver rupes of in-dia, 32.4 cents, and the yen of Japan, 49.8 cents. Again, we hear of the selapi (50 cents Spanish), the tationg bahaque, 37 cents: the cahati, 25 cents; the sleapat 12 cents, and the sicolo, 6 cents.

Long before the Spanish war-25 years earlier, in fact-and before the acquisition of the Philippines had been dreamed of the United States attempted to improve its commercial standing in the Orient by the issue of a coin for that region. The "trade dollar" provided for in the act of 1873 was invented for that purpose. It contained 420 grains of standard silver and was not intended for use in the United States, but for circulation in China and the East. It became a legal tender in the United States, however, to the amount of $5, and in 1876, its builton value having fallen below $1, its legal tender quality was taken away by act of Congress. The simplification of the currency the Philippines and the introduction silver unit that shall be of stable value and so safeguarded that it shall not repeat the feat of the trade dolfar and be come a disturbing factor at home is the task now before Congress.-Minneapolis

GLADSTONE'S DIARY FOUND.

A valuable "find" has been made b John Morley among Mr. Gladetone's vo luminous papers, for the treasure is nonother than a diary written up from ar early period in Mr. Gladstone's career and, apparently, brought down to close of his life. It is intimated that much of the contents is of too private and personal a character to permit unre served publication while any of Mr. Gladstone's contemporaries are alive.

A meeting of the northern lines is being held at Seattle today to consider local freight matters of interest to the lines in this territory and to check up rates and make comparisons. A Long But Sure Wait. The following romance of an Emerald siander has been published, and will be read with much sympathy and the sin cere hope that it may be true: Mr. Henry Warren, son of a Dublin banker, made the acquaintance of a young lady while at college, and ultimately became engaged. Warren's father died suddenly, leaving his estate insolvent and in debt, whereupon the young man vowed that he would never marry until he had paid his father's debts. He offered his flances her freedom, which she declined to accept, and then emigrated to the States. There, after a long struggle, he succeeded about a year ago in paying off the last penny, and since has been saving with a view to marrying the lady of his choice. He had not corresponded with her for years, but knew through mutual friends that she was still living. A few days ago he sent her the following cablegram: "All debts paid; I am coming," and in reply received the wel-come message, "I am waiting." He has now returned to Ireland to make arrange-
