

NEWS OF THE WATER FRONT

How the Grain is Moving Through This Port to Date.

The grain tonnage in port is 11,000, the Speke having a net ton register of 2100; the Lord Shaftesbury, 2200; the Quito, 2100; the Asie, 2000, and the Nomia, 2100. These vessels will carry approximately a total of 12,000 tons.

The Lord Shaftesbury began loading today at the Elevator dock, and will complete her cargo at Columbia No. 2. The Nomia is at the Irving dock, and will probably finish loading tomorrow.

Just how much of last season's crop remains to be shipped is wholly conjectural, several carloads arriving at each of the warehouses almost daily.

CROP REPORT.

The past week has been unseasonably cool and cold, local rains have occurred almost daily in the Western part of the state, and showery conditions prevailed generally east of the Cascade mountains.

The maximum, or day temperatures in Western Oregon ranged between 52 degrees and 72 degrees, and the minimum, or night temperatures between 40 degrees and 52 degrees.

maximum temperatures ranged between 45 degrees and 72 degrees and the minimum temperatures between 34 degrees and 52 degrees.

Both Fall and Spring wheat continue to make satisfactory progress, except on low and poorly drained land in the Willamette Valley, where the Fall wheat keeps yellow and has a sickly appearance.

Gardens are backward and very weedy. The cool, wet weather has retarded the growth of tender vegetables, but potatoes seem to be doing fairly well.

The weather has been unfavorable for tree fruit and the reports regarding the condition of prunes and pears, are very conflicting. Italian prunes will be a total failure in some orchards in the central portion of the valley, while in other orchards the prospects are favorable for a half to a full crop.

SOCIAL PORTLAND

A charming entertainment was given by the Physical Culture Club at the Woman's Union, 510 Flanders street, on Monday night, it being the closing event of the kind for the season.

The San Greal Society held its monthly meeting at the First Presbyterian Church Monday night and the attendance was quite large. After the business was transacted, a delightful program was rendered, every number being excellent.

One of the most pleasant parties given by Mr. and Mrs. A. Dreyer this season was that in honor of the confirmation of their only son, Samuel J. Dreyer, preparations being made for two days—entertaining, Saturday, for Master Sam's young friends, and Sunday afternoon and evening for the friends of the family.

The JOURNAL SHORT STORY

"Well, those old college days were jolly, weren't they, Nan?" and Jack Benton leaned against the mantel, smiling down into the girl's upturned face. "Yes, indeed, and I'm glad that I resurrected all these old photographs and souvenirs, since you enjoy looking them over again."

Handsome Jack Benton stooped over the table and picked up one of the old photographs that lay there in a pile. "Your mandolin club!" he murmured. "Fairly good pictures, too. How young I look in it, though! Ang what's this? Another group? Oh, one of those girls' societies. I suppose Nan belonged to it. Let's see if I can recognize any of their faces—oh! The picture was dropped as if it had burned him. 'Ethel Fanshawe!'"

Jack Benton and Nan Welsh had been comrades ever since they had made mud pies together in Mrs. Welsh's back yard, and had handed cookies from one chubby hand to another through the slats of the fence that separated their parental premises.

"I told you I'd not be long, Jack," said Nan, quickly re-entering the room, but the letter was mislaid somehow, and it had to rummage through my desk twice before I could find it. It's from Sallo Allen, one of our old Kappa Chi girls—what are you looking so cross for, Jack?"

"Oh, nothing; a mere trifle. I was thinking of the cruelties of existence." "You wretched pessimist, and with my trying so hard to amuse you. I'd have a great notion not to read the news in this to you, and I wouldn't do it, either, but you happen to know the people. Are you going to be good?"

"Yes, indeed," he replied, stifling a sigh. "I'm as meek as Moses. Please begin."

AGAINST THE WORKINGMAN

How C. W. Nottingham Voted on Labor Bill.

C. W. Nottingham, candidate for Joint Representative on the machine ticket and a member of the present Legislature, has the opportunity now of explaining to the workingman why he opposed the passage of the fellow servant bill and registered his vote against it.

This was a measure in the passage of which the railroad employees were vitally interested. Poorman of Marion, formerly a conductor on the Southern Pacific road, who knew the merits of the desired bill, was its champion on the floor of the House, and the members representing Multnomah County, whose election was largely due to the votes of the workmen, were expected to stand by their pledges and vote for this important measure.

Men who believe in the dignity of labor should spot Nottingham, vote against him; vote against every candidate for the Legislature on the machine ticket. If elected, they will, like Nottingham, vote "No" on any measure intended to better the condition of the working class.

Following is Nottingham's record when the fellow servants bill came up on its third reading, as taken from page 64, House Journal, session of 1901:

House bill No. 80 read third time. The question being, "Shall the bill pass?" the roll was called and the vote was: Yeas—Messrs. Allen, Bernards, Carter, Colvig, Driscoll, Grace, Hahn, Harris, Hartman, Hedges, Heltemper, Keene, Mattoon, McAllister, McQueen, Montague, Orton, Poorman, Reavis, Rice, Smith of Marion and Thompson of Multnomah—23.
