

PATRIOT HONORED

Unveiling of the Statue to Rochambeau.

(Journal Special Service.)
WASHINGTON, D. C., May 24.—Tribute was paid today to the memory of Jean Baptiste Donatien de Vimeur, Vicomte de Rochambeau when the Hamar monument to the illustrious patriot and general was unveiled in the presence of the President, his cabinet, a distinguished delegation representing the French government and many other prominent guests. The statue is placed in Lafayette Square, opposite the Lafayette monument, where a vast crowd of people congregated this afternoon to witness the unveiling ceremonies.

President Roosevelt spoke briefly and extolled Vicomte de Rochambeau. Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, of Massachusetts, sounded the clarion note of the day, delivering the chief oration. Both addresses were sincere eulogies of the character, devoted fealty to the cause of liberty and the courageous qualities of the hero whose statue served to inspire the sentences.

The President and his cabinet, together with the French visitors, were escorted to Lafayette Square by a considerable number of troops. These included cavalry and infantry from Fort Myer and Washington Barracks and detachments of marines and sailors. The French military forces were represented by a large military band and a detachment of marines from the battleship Gaultois. The crimson red of the artillery troops, the rattle and clatter of the horses and field pieces, and the many marching infantrymen served to tint the procession with just enough martial color to make it form a fitting preliminary to the unveiling of the bronze monument to the famous French hero.

The French visitors rode in carriages under cavalry escort. They included General Brugere, Commander-in-Chief of the French army; General de Chalander, one of whose ancestors was a Lieutenant of Rochambeau; Lieutenant-Colonel l'Hermite, Captain Poullice de Saint-Mara, Captain Lapon, Vice-Admiral Fournier, M. Jean Guillemin, Robert de Billy, Count Paul de Lafayette and the Countess Rochambeau.

The Countess Rochambeau had the honor of pulling the cords that loosed the drapery of French and American flags concealing the monument. The Countess was given the signal and she seized hold of the ropes with a quick, determined grasp. She gave one pull and then another. The crowd stood as one man, expectant and intent. She jerked harder, and within a moment the folds about the monument began to shake apart. Gradually they dropped away, and all at once they fell from the monument in a heap and the sun lighted the whole work. President Roosevelt had risen from his chair in the special stand and members of his cabinet and the French visitors were also on their feet. As the statue came into full view its magnificence was strikingly presented to the people. A mighty cheer, such as welcomes the great ship as she slides into the water after the christening, was heard, and the bands struck up in concert the French national air.

Herbert D. Pierce, third assistant Secretary of State, was master of ceremonies and made a short speech in which he referred most eloquently to the French hero.

The statue unveiled today is a replica of the one by Ferdinand Hamar, which was unveiled at Vendome, France, two years ago. It stands facing Pennsylvania avenue, west of the White House, in a position corresponding to that occupied by the memorial to Lafayette, which occupies the southeast corner of Lafayette Park, east of the White House. The statue was erected with an appropriation of $7,600 by Congress. It is a handsome affair of bronze on a marble base and is said to be a striking likeness of Vicomte de Rochambeau. From base to top the monument stands over 30 feet high.

The Theaters

CORDRAY'S.

The comedy, Too Rich to Marry, which will be seen at Cordray's theater commencing Sunday matinee, is the humorous and pathetic story of a young lover who is infatuated with a sweet and simple little Dunkardess, and whose affections are required, but who is the heir to a large fortune, and for that reason is not acceptable to the Dunkard parents. The stern and simple old parents of the charming girl think, as a part of their belief, that riches are a curse, and they do not propose to allow their daughter, who "loves not wisely but too well," to marry a man with such a loadstone on his shoulders as the inheritance of a fortune. On account of the love of the young couple and the opposition of the parents of the girl, complications arise which afford a wealth of humorous situations, and give the author a chance to show how a true American can surmount everything, even millions, for the girl he loves. The working out of the difficulty is more than pleasing, and holds the attention of all to first a laugh and then a bit of pathos, so well blended that the story seems to be that of everyday life instead of a stage production.

THE BAKER.

In order to attest the appreciation of the many patrons, and to satisfy the numerous demands for a fitting memento of the Stuart Stock Company, the management of the Baker theater has prepared an elegant souvenir, which will be presented to each patron at the Saturday matinee, as a signet to seal the close of Monte Carlo, and at Sunday's afternoon performance a souvenir of the entire company will be presented as a brilliant herald for the week's bill. During the week the company will produce Bronson Howard's play, The Banker's Daughter, and every effort is being put forth to make the presentation a perfect one.

The story of the play has no doubt been heard before in other avenues of life, but it goes to show very forcibly that money and position in life do not always insure happiness. The banking firm of Babbage & Westbrook find that they are in straitened financial circumstances, when Westbrook discovers that the cloud of ruin will rise before a dazzling sun of prosperity in the event of his daughter's hand being given to one Strebelow. The father consents to the alliance, and Strebelow presses his suit, which the young woman in order to save her father from destruction encourages, although unknown to her parents her heart is given to another. Her father, thinking that his daughter is ignorant of his financial straits, exults in his daughter's wedded happiness, and his own temporal preservation.

The daughter, though now wedded to Strebelow, still entertains her lover of olden days, and this secret trust is watched with eagerness by an ardent though rejected suitor, the Count de Carojac. At a well timed moment, the Count picks a quarrel with Routledge, the accepted lover, and kills him in a duel, giving as his reason for the challenge his compromising the name of Mme. Strebelow.

This is the first intimation that Strebelow has of his wife's dual love, but in order to vindicate the wrong done her as his wife, he challenges the Count and kills him in the encounter. After the struggle is settled, and he learns that his wife was really in love with Routledge, he obtains legal separation from his wife, as a result of which she, with their one child, returns to the home of her father. On the occasion of Mr. Westbrook's sister being engaged in writing some business letters, the little one displays anxiety to write also, and having no one to whom she can send a letter, she suddenly decides that it would be well to write to her papa. Mrs. Holcomb sees that opportunity is afforded to bring about a reconciliation between the husband and wife, and aids the little one in forwarding the childish note, which is more than effective in bringing about the much desired result.

THE MARQUAM.

The Frawley company will close a week's engagement tonight at the Marquam with the production of The Charity Ball, Belasco and De Mille's greatest success. The same piece was presented at this afternoon's matinee to a crowded house. The company has met with good success during the entire week.

BABY DIES IN TERRIBLE AGONY

(Journal Special Service.)
GLENDIVE, Mont., May 24.—Elsidore Obergfell and Mrs. J. A. Pennington arrived from Newton bringing with them the dead body of Mrs. Pennington's 15-months-old baby girl. While visiting at a neighbor's, the baby drank some strong lye water. They left for Glendive at 5 o'clock for medical assistance.

The child suffered the greatest agony, and when about ten miles from the city the lye ate into an artery and the child bled to death internally, dying in its mother's arms.

They arrived at 11 o'clock at night at County Clerk Wyman's house. The husband is shearing at Hoyt. The body was taken to Sidney for interment.

New Unions.

G. Y. Harry, organizer for the American Federation of Labor, is in Southern Oregon towns in the interest of union labor. A federal union, a typographical union and a painters' union have been organized at Eugene; carpenters, painters and clerks' unions at Roseburg, and a federal union, and clerks' and painters' unions at Grants Pass. Reports are that all these organizations have started out with hearty support, and everything seems favorable for their success.

BUTCHER TONIGHT

He Will Speak in Turn Halle.

Colonel W. F. Butcher speaks today at Turn Halle, and a great rally is expected. The fine meetings that have been held during the past few evenings have increased the enthusiasm to such an extent that it is reasonable to look for a highly successful meeting this evening. The Colonel has made a magnificent campaign throughout Eastern Oregon, and is now in fine fettle, his voice in good trim and he has his subject well in hand. People who desire to listen to a vigorous and intelligent discussion of such issues as naturally pertain to the campaign of a candidate for Congress should turn out tonight and hear Colonel Butcher at Turn Halle.

GOOD CROP.

(Journal Special Service.)
SAN FRANCISCO, May 24.—In quantity, quality and prices Pacific Coast orchardists should have a banner season. This is the opinion of James S. Watson of Chicago, president of Porter Brothers Company, one of the largest shipping firms handling California green fruits.

Mr. Watson has had the fruit districts canvassed and the prospects for a great yield are flattering. His agents have visited the fruit regions of the Eastern and Southern States. They report there will be a shortage in many localities. On this account the demand for Coast fruits will be greatly increased, with a good influence in prices. In New York, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana and elsewhere there will be a shortage that must be supplied from this Coast.

"Orchardists of the West," continued Mr. Watson, "should get a lot of Eastern money during the green fruit season just opened. In my reports about the Eastern fruit prospects I find them poor in New York, especially for plums, peaches and cherries. Late frosts did much damage. There will be a heavy crop of apples. In the Long Island district there will be an excellent crop of fruits. As to the New England states, there has been some slight damage by frosts, but there will be an average crop of small fruits."
