CRATER LAKE from a passing train.

Is the Theory of Some Recent Explorers of That Body of Water.

(Journal Special Service.) GRANTS PASS, June 17 -- A party of men who have just returned from the Cascade mountains investigating timber lands report that they believe Crater Lake, which occupies the extinct crater of Mount Mazama, is boiling. They say that they could not get close enough to the water of the lake owing to the snow, but they were close enough to see clouds of steam arise and could hear low and deep rumblings as though coming from the depths of the moun-

(Journal Special Service.) SALEM, June 17 .- Yesterday was memorial day with the Modern Woodmen of America, and memorial day with the Woodmen of the World of Salem, as well as the Women of Woodcraft, and the day was a most interesting one for the fraternities. During the forenoon the Modern Woodmen, Oregon Cedar Camp. No. 5246, met at the hall of the order, and led by the Modern Woodmen Band and the uniformed degree team went to the cemetery south of this city, where, at the grave of the late Frank S. Dearborn, the beautiful memorial service of the order was held and the grave was decorated.

During the afternoon Salem Camp, No. 118, Woodmen of the World, and Silver Bell Circle, No. 43, Women of Woodcraft, held a Joint memorial service and unveiling of monuments. Forming in procession at the hall they marched out to the cemetery where, at the grave of the late Mrs. Ernestine Newman, the Women of Woodcraft unveiled a beautiful marble shaft, erected by the order. After musical numbers by a double quartet and the Atualistic ceremonies, Head Manager W. C. Hawly delivered one of the best memo rial addresses ever heard in the capital

Following this ceremony the Woodmen of the World proceeded to the graves of Elmer E. Harritt and W. W. Stephens, of Salem Camp, No. 118, and Phil Grant, of one of the Portland camps of the order, and at each a monument was unveiled with the simple but impressive ceremony, the double quartet and the band furnishing the music. At the grave of W. W. Stephens, Superintendent J. D. Lee delivered a beautiful and affecting

At the conclusion of unveiling, the members of the order, preceded by the band, passed to the grave of the late Frank B. Ferrell, who was killed by Tracy, the escaped convict at the prison last Monday morning. With tearful eyes and sorrowing hearts the members gathered around the newly made mound, on, which the piles of flowers, placed there at the time of the funeral, were still visible, though partially covered by new floral pieces. After a brief ceremony the grave was covered with flowers brought by the 250 members, and the procession slowly wended its way out of the city of the

AN OLD, STRONG BOX

Historical Society Has One Used by John McLoughlin.

Among the recent additions to the exhibit of the Oregon Historical Society is a strong-box which belonged to Dr. John McLoughlin and which is believed to have been brought from Canada to Vancouver in 1824, and then to Oregon City by Dr. McLoughlin, thus making it the first safe in Oregon. It was presented by Mrs. Theodore Wygart, a granddaughter of the former owner. Two other articles of interest are a fire brick and a portion of the missenmast of the steamer Beaver, the first steamer in the Pacific Ocean, which left England in 1835 and entered the mouth of the Columbia River in 1836. THE STRIKE IS NOT YET SETTLED

A Protracted Meeting Held Yesterday, But Little Accomplished.

The meeting yesterday afternoon between the planing and sawmill men, Amalgamated Woodworkers and representatives of the Building Trades Council was in session from 1 until 6 o'clock, but virtually nothing was accomplished, and the situation remains practically the

WHY THEY MET. The millmen stated that they were present through the earnest solcitation of Mr. Poulsen, of the Inman-Poulsen Company, and that if the labor representatives had any propositions to make that they would give them a respectful hearing.

THE SITUATION STATED. Mr. Ammund acted as spokesman for the employes and presented their side of the case. He remarked that the mills had been notified sveral months ago that, beginning with May 1, nine hours should constitute a day's work, and that wages should remain the same as for 10 hours' work: that the owners had refused their demand and this constituted their grievance. He further stated: We think the owners should have, on the notice they received, been ready comply with the request, and also to have recognized the union. Mr. McFarland replied briefly on be half of the millmen. He said that this had been gone over before, and that the millmen had discussed it fully with their men, and that there is absolutely no room to argue the matter further. He said that Portland mills could pay no more wages or work less hours than the mills of Puget Sound or of California and to retain the trade that was necessary to hold in order to keep the mills in operation

POULSON'S PROPOSITION. Mr. Poulsen submitted a fair proposition, stating that the sawmill he represents, providing the other sawmills would do likewise, would take out the machines for band sawing, turning and stock moulding, the product of which comes in direct competition with the work of the planing mills, if such a course would have a tendency to settle the strike. The Jones and East Side sawmills, however, refused to do this The millmen admitted that with the elimination of these machines from the sawmills that it would considerably simplify the situation, but did not believe that it would be sufficient to bring the two factions together. In answer to a question this morning Mr. Poulsen stated:

"Not much was gained by the meeting yesterday further than getting the interested parties together. They should over, and some means could certainly be devised to bring the strike to a close." WILLING TO ARBITRATE.

The members of the Building Trade Council are willing to have the differences arbitrated by any fair-minded board that is proposed. They have taken this stand all along, and have not recreded from it in the least. At their meeting last night no business was done bearing upon the strike further than the passage of a resolution, the substance of which is as follows:

Resolved, That the Building Trades Council is willing that the difficulty between the planing mill owners and the Amalgamated Woodworkers' Union be placed in the hands of Judge George H. Williams, H. W. Corbett and George M. Orton to see if there is a case for arbiand rarely failed to bring down his birds on the wing. He was never seen without a rifle and two or three pistols about him and though at first this occasioned much talk the novelty of the man soon wore off and people ceased to take any particular notice of him.

"Thus he lived until the day on which Sheriff Williams came to his death.

"Shortly before this time he became insolent and rude and various thefts from the cottages were traced to him. One case in particular was clear. He had stolon some goods from State Senator Charles Fulton's cottage and Sheriff Williams. Mr. Fulton and two deputies went to arrest him.

"When Sheriff Williams approached Willard he noticed that he was heavily armed and stepping up to him said, 'Here! you'd better give me those guns,' Willard backed away, saying, 'No! no man will ever take my guns away from me."

'All right,' said the Sheriff, 'you walk shead of us and we'll go over and settle this thing.' 'Not by a --- sight,' was the reply. 'Go ahead yourself.'

SHOT FROM BEHIND.

"In the meantime Senator Fulton and one deputy had entered the house before which the above colloquy had taken place to make further search for the stolen goods. Just as the Sheriff started to walk Willard shot him through the heart from behind. He fell forward on his face, dead and Willard turning the smoking rifle on Lamers, fired twice, shooting him both times through the left breast.

The deputy, though fatally wounded was a powerful man and rushed forward, gripping the murderer fast in his dying elutch, calling as he did so for help. The other deputy and State Senator Fulton, attracted by the shots, now rushed to the scene and the latter seizing a revolver beat the murderer over the head with it partially sunning him, while at the same moment the dying deputy loosened his grasp and rolled over on his side, gasping out 'Good-bye! I'm done.'

By this time Senator Fulton had esoled Willard's rifle which had -been knocked out of his hand by the rush of the dead deputy and he lost no time in seizing it and as the murderer again attempted to draw a pistol he fired a shot which striking the criminal in the angle of the right jaw tore away the whole of ne lower part of his face.

The feroclous heart of the man, howver, was still unbroken. He raised himself up on one elbow, wiped the blood and dirt out of his eyes, and drawing a pistol from a belt beneath his coat shot the remaining deputy through the thigh, getting in return a shot through the heart from the rifle in the hands of Fulton which effectually put a stop to his career

NERVY TO DEATH. 'A curious feature of the case was the emarkable vitality of the men who figred in it. Sheriff Williams ran nearly hundred feet after he was shot through the heart; the first deputy shot kept his hold on his murderer for nearly two minutes after he had been shot through the body and with the whole the force of his dying grip that the arms of the murderer bore the purple imprints of his ten fingers as it laid cold in death. meet frequently and talk the matter The most remarkable, however, was the ferocity of the murderer who though shot htrough the body and with the whole lower part of his face blown away, still retained strength enough to enable him with almost his last gasp to shoot the second guard.
