State Policeman Mace Pewtherer frowningly looking down his cheekbones as he points both index fingers at a typewriter keyboard.

Jacksonville's unit in the national guard—Andy Smith, James Smith, Harland Clark and Robert Forbes—boarding a choochoo for Camp Clatsop, where they will be taught how to win a war, march in any kind of weather, get up early, kill men for God and their country and appreciate their home town when they get back. They departed amid a cloud of cinders and handwaving, necks craned kangaroo-like out windows.

Johnny Renault again trying to beat a little penny slot machine out of its copper, the machine winning again, as usual.

Virginia Flick, hatless, scanning heads of passersby intently.

A defense witness in the LaDieu trial strengthening the state's case.

John Winningham displaying entrainment orders for the Brush Marine service.

Sentiment generally changing toward the Banks-Eehl controversy, which filled so many dull winter evenings with lively gossip, debate and speculation.

Viv Beach rubbing his hands together in a gleefully satisfied manner Sunday as his boys were showing some real baseball ability.

Little Buster White heaving a baseball with vim and vigor at weekly practice for the little fellows.

Bill Johnson, foot ripped open by a baseball cleat, grinning good-naturally and admitting "aw, it don't hurt much." Hobbling around the next day with an old sock adorning the injured pedal extremity.

Mrs. Ray Wilson feeding her customers with all the care and generosity of any mother.

Alice Hoefs not getting anything written up about her this week because she called someone "pretty."

Weeds growing profusely in the city park where lawn grass had been hopefully planted, and the shrubbery carefully set out apparently thirsty for moisture.

Chris Kenney returning Saturday night from southern California, where he had been working for the past year, and admitting he didn't like the earthquakes there, which to him remove any sense of security and tranquility. "They sure tried to keep it quiet, though," he explained to friends.

THE MACHINE AGE

We are in a period of reconstruction. Where will it lead us? The history of civilization falls roughly into ages, such as, for example, the Stone age and the age of metals. We are now in the Machine age. The Machine age is a logical consequence of the age of metals and scientific learning and investigation.

Our national and racial adjustment must be made to the Machine age. What is our future in the Machine age? That depends entirely upon the human heart.

The machine is inanimate. When the heart of man is good, the machine is good. When the heart of man is bad, the machine is bad. Through history, the machine may be Tubal Cain's plowshare, or it may be a 42 centimeter super-bore hurling shells into cities miles away—depending entirely upon the human motives behind it. The machine has been a factor in wars. This is not the fault of the machine. When murder is done, we try the murderer, not his weapon. We send the murderer to the chair, not his gun or knife. The machine is built upon rigid principles of truth as they are found in physics, dynamics, and mathematics. If our motives are good in the years ahead, it can be our most effective tool in social progress.—H. W. Whicker in Grants Pass Bulletin.

A nine-pound trout is reported from Bend, Oregon, to have swallowed a rattlesnake and a 10-inch waterdog, but we've not been able to similarly dispose of the yarn.—Weston Leader.

Punch says the savage tribes of Africa pay no taxes. Then what makes them savage? — Weston Leader.
