The Editor Speaking

boomed by hundreds of thousands of men whom he had helped. In the old south they STILL despise Lincoln and teach stories of his foolishness and poor leadership.

Franklin D. Roosevelt can expect, if his plans are for the most part successful and helpful, bitter enemies and great hatreds. People were made that way. And jealousy will increase as Roosevelt's success increases. The only place great men get their just desserts is in history books, written long after they have passed from this earth.

One thing we can say for Roosevelt's measures, however, if they are for the most part beneficial, and that is they do not discriminate. They are designed to aid the republican as well as the democrat. They are patterned to be a blessing to every American, so far as is possible. The man who voted against Roosevelt has as much to gain, and his need is as great for help, as the man who voted democratic.

It looks as though the business recovery feature of the administration really means to take a hand in things and straighten out the evils which plunged us all into difficulties. One industrial code was turned down the other day because a minimum labor wage of $10 for 48 hours was asked for. The government's representatives decided that if a minimum wage is to be of any help whatever to the country, it will have to be at least a living wage.

The industrial recovery will step on a few toes, but it will take the pain off hundreds of thousands of others while it is doing that. Chain stores, for example, will get into one line of business and stay there, as we understand it, and quit selling everything from groceries to heavy hardware. Instead of everyone being in every business and no particular one, they are going to choose what branch they like and stick to it.

Cutthroat competition, which eventually leads to cutting every one else's throat besides the price slasher's, will be eliminated. Either a merchant or business man will make a profit in his line, or he will not be in it. Which is just enough. No one is justified in working for nothing. In fact, working for nothing voluntarily forces others, who are not so inclined, to do the same thing.

Today lumber yards sell paint, hardware, lumber and all by-products imaginable. Hardware stores sell windows, doors, roofing and so on. Under the new scheme of things a lumberman will sell lumber only. The hardware man will be given the paint and nails and such, but will have to leave building materials alone. And it took us years of degeneration to reach the stage where finally government has had to step in and tell the business man how to survive!

But then, government is for the very purpose of accomplishing those things that men or groups of men cannot do alone. Although in the past few years one would scarcely have divined that function from the government we were living under. After clouds of poor business practice have gathered for years, they finally have reached the stage of precipitation where they descend in rain to leave the skies clear again—for a while.

Speaking of human nature, it is queer what people will and won't do. The other day we were talking to a Medford business man who admitted, with a blush, he used to play a particular prank on his mother. During summer months he went barefoot, causing a heavy layer of protecting skin to form on the bottom of his feet. Tampering and fiddling around, he discovered this layer was insensitive, that he could pierce it with a needle point without pain. So he promptly searched through the family sewing machine's drawers for black thread and proceeded to sew a design in the soles of his feet.

Naturally, when shown to the maternal guardian, she just about passed out. So, of course, the trick was repeated every summer until the ornery urchin grew too large for barefootness. We're sometimes glad we can never be a mother.

Funny how long it takes people to get wise to themselves. Our journalistic activities waited until The Miner was born one and one-half years ago but years ago when we were a freshman in high school we won a booby prize as the greatest prevaricator in the institution.

Take Henry Ford for a moment. He should know better, after sending a "peace ship" to Europe to nearly precipitate another war, than to invade the great timbered northwest with a series of advertisements which tell how much more serviceable steel is than wood!

Steel has its place, but so has wood. He prates about the superior qualities of steel. Maybe Ford has never planted a metal post and watched it rust out in a fraction of the time wood will endure. There is resiliency, spring and lightness to wood not possessed by metal. There is personality and a hint of life and growth in wood.

The Supreme Creator must have been sold on the merits of wood as a building material, for He made us so much of it. Oregonians can drive a few miles and see trees which have stood for thousands of years—the oldest living things on earth. And along comes a puny man, wanting to sell his all-metal cars, claiming that wood is inferior to any other product of this earth!

Just ask a California earthquake sufferer what he'd rather have over his head and under his feet when a shock comes along.

"If a man should live out of doors, eat simple foods and wear no clothes he would live to an average age of 189," asserts a scientist, in seeming advocacy of a nude departure.—Weston Leader.

No need for the baker to be especially industrious. He gets more, now, for a loaf.—Weston Leader.

The king of Oyo is said to have 400 wives and 600 children, which ought to stimulate a market for the yo-yo in Oyo.—Weston Leader.

Chamber of Commerce Turns to Legerdemain to Transform Dance Pavilion to Paved Street

Veritably kicking the dance pavilion into the street, last Monday night the Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce, like any wise man, changed its mind and decided not to build a dance pavilion for the Gold Rush Jubilee after all.

A week ago the body voted the proposition and promptly called for bids and expected to start construction the day The Miner went to press. So now the editor is a liar, and jubileers will dance in the street, so there. It seems that preliminary plans and their later developments varied somewhat and that conditions under which the committee believed it was to finance the structure were somewhat different than terms tendered with lumber bids.

At any rate, it was agreed that the present U. S. hotel would function again this year as last, when thrice its capacity of dancers attempted to squeeze into the place and that a mammoth street dance would be held as a novel outlet for the energies of those who trip the light fantastic.

And as for tripping the light fantastic, or anything else, "you simply can't beat a curbstone for that," added one chamber member as the meeting got underway. So building activities here will be confined to the mammoth grandstand to be erected for the rodeo, baseball games and wrestling card to be staged by Mack Lillard on the big night when the old town struts her stuff.

President Oscar Lewis announced at the meeting he would handle the street dance, while Clint Dunnington will be in charge of both the U. S. ball crowd and the old-fashioned dance to be held

Favor Wheat Control Despite Price Advance

With preliminary county wheat meetings completed throughout the state, the next move in putting the wheat adjustment program into effect in Oregon will be to district each county into definite community units and build these into the permanent county wheat production associations, according to officials of the state college extension service in charge of "Triple A" educational work in this state. Each county agent, with the help of a temporary committee, will start this local organization work.

Those who took part in the series of 29 educational meetings throughout the 22 leading wheat producing counties report keen and intelligent interest on the part of those to whom wheat is a principal source of livelihood. Among those the sentiment was overwhelmingly in favor of joining the wheat control plan despite the sensational advance in wheat prices while the meetings were being held.

Opinion prevails that present market booms, while highly beneficial for growers having wheat to sell this year, gives little promise for the future unless some form of acreage control is put into effect. The fact remains, according to those who have studied production and consumption statistics, that even the short crop this year, plus the abnormal carryover, will probably leave the United States with twice the normal carryover next July, and that given then normal wheat yield on the usual acreage, the surplus would mount to ruinous proportions with consequent effect on prices.

The wheat plan, it is pointed out, permits the grower signing the contract to reap all the benefits of present advanced prices on all wheat he has on hand or will harvest this year, while insuring him of a fair "parity" price on the allotment portion of his crop in the next two years. In addition, it will provide cash benefit payments this year in return for agreement to limit acreage if called upon for 1934 and 1935.

Meanwhile enough cotton growers through the south have signed up with the government so that 10,000,000 acres of this year's crop will be destroyed so as to reduce production by more than 3,000,000 bales. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace has accepted the contracts and proclaimed the processing tax of 4.2 cents per pound on cotton effective August 1.

Prospects for the construction of the Grants Pass to Crescent City railroad are very good, if the confidence of southern Oregon business men interested in the project is well founded.

Two brothers, construction company with headquarters in San Francisco and owners of the California and Oregon Coast railroad, have made application to the reconstruction finance corporation for a loan of $5,518,000 for the road and general confidence that the loan will be granted has been expressed in Medford and Grants Pass.

The 70-mile route has been surveyed and part of the right-of-way has been obtained, which will mean that work could start as soon as funds were available.

Not only will this project be self-liquidating, but it also will make full use of the Crescent City harbor, on which about $1,500,000 has been spent, and also the railroad that extends westward from Grants Pass.

Engineers of the R. F. C. who surveyed the resources for the territory which would be served by the new road recommended the project as being self liquidating and pointed out that it would give immediate employment to a large number of men.

The natural route to be followed would be the one which passes through the Applegate to Wilderville. This route was surveyed several years ago.—Grants Pass Bulletin.

Jack Dempsey also is getting some wedding ring experience.—Weston Leader.

Yearly Student Cost at O. S. C. Reduced

Drastically lower student costs, some increase in assets and cash on hand, but more than usual demands for extension of loans are shown in the annual report of the student loan fund committee at Oregon State college, just submitted by Dr. W. M. Atwood to Chancellor W. J. Kerr.

The average student budget for the year submitted by 105 applicants for loans was only $469.15, or 34 per cent under the peak year of 1929-30, and nearly 20 per cent under a year ago. The lowest average record for the year was made by the non-scholarship women at $391.50, though one non-fraternity man was living on a budget of $225.45. The average cost of a year in school for the fraternity men was $518.43, and for the sorority women, $514.29. Non-fraternity men averaged $413.67.

Thrift is best exemplified now by judicious spending.—Weston Leader.
