Have You a Better Way?

Longshoremen, in their strike, have brought down much criticism on their shoulders from inland peoples who probably understand little of what they are so definitely prejudicing their minds about.

The waterfront strikes, of course, are hindering business and commerce. Idle ships and cargoes work a hardship on many—all just because "some waterfront totter wants more money," it is being said. But we have an idea the longshoremen are fighting for several things which they believe are right.

Perhaps the strikers are wrong in part. Possibly they picked an unfortunate time to commence making demands. But it always takes two to complete any argument, and how about the stubbornness on the other side? News dispatches state recognition of their union is one of the longshoremen's main issues, and there is no known reason why any labor union should not be recognized, same as the employer.

It is regrettable, of course, that differences have to be settled at the inconvenience of others. Mediation would be far more satisfactory to both sides, and would eliminate fights, bloodshed, commercial losses and misunderstandings.

But, so long as arbitration is not agreed upon, and so long as employers will not accede to strikers' demands in any particular, just what other course could the longshoremen take? Labor always has had to fight for everything it ever got. The workingman has to look out for Number One, same as everyone else.

Unfair as it may seem to the rest of the world, labor's last resort is to strike. And, after all, longshoremen probably know a whale of a lot more about their own troubles, and to what extent they must go to rectify them, than do inlanders who have been so ready with their criticism.

AT THE GRAVE OF A SOLDIER DECORATION DAY

By J. C. REYNOLDS

Here at the grave of a soldier
I pause with hat in hand;
And in thought too deep to utter,
Reverently I stand.

Under this mound he is sleeping—
Restful, untroubled, mute—
And to his name on the headstone
I make the grand salute.

But for this valiant soldier—
But for the men like him—
We would now be as the serfs are,
Slaves to a tyrant's whim.

Here in this grave lies a hero—
Never should we forget
All that we owe to our soldiers—
A vast, unsettled debt.

Here on this mound so sacred,
I place with grateful pride,
The Flag of his own loved country
For which he fought and died.

Then from the spot thus hallowed,
I turn with noiseless tread,
Lest I may disturb the slumber
Of him—the glorious dead.

"For how can a man die better
Than facing fearful odds,
For the honor of his fathers
And the temples of his gods."
