● Mr. and Mrs. Homer Rice of San Francisco were recent guests of Mrs. John Byrne of Applegate. The Californians were enroute to Portland to visit Mrs. Rice's sister, after which they would return over the coast route. Mr. Rice formerly was employed with John A. Peri at Medford.

● Ira Coffman was initiated into another of the don'ts of the Little Applegate country a few days ago when he left his tent exposed to the scintillations of a skunk, which was casting about (and how and what it was casting about) for edibles. On returning from an absence, Ira discovered his new sack of flour, as yet unopened, so well scented that it had to be discarded.

● Something of the energetic nature of Uncle Sam's fire guard on Little Applegate came to light recently when the story was told of how John Byrne rose in the silent night to issue a camp fire permit. Wary from the day's work (possibly from fighting yellow jackets away from the mulligan) Mr. Byrne retired at an early hour, only to be roused by a masculine voice requesting a camp fire permit. Mr. Byrne dressed and carried on a casual conversation while preparing to write the permit. At the last moment he discovered his visitor was his own son Maurice playing a prank.

The largest fire occurring on Applegate this season, which burned over 300 acres of ground on the Spencer hills near Ruch Friday, was put under control in a little more than 12 hours by 100 local CCC men. The fire was said to have been started by an incendiary.
