Watershed No Pasture

Although Jacksonville at this moment possesses an almost waterless watershed, still there seems to be no obvious reason why that area which serves her residents should be made a miner's camp ground and pasture for cattle, that feed almost down to the water's edge in the large reservoir.

Although any comment on the local water supply at this time is a bit dry and dusty, still it won't be long until fall rains send surface refuse rushing toward the reservoir and cattle and squatters' leavings wont add to the tastiness or quality of the water.

After all, cow chips hardly make appetizing boulders for this city's water supply to splash over, and some plan should be considered to eliminate abuse of the watershed.

CCC is C-C Pill to Art

Arthur Edward Powell, tall head man of the Central Point American, bemoans the fact that several thousand CCC enrollees have quit to take other jobs, "which will mean even more men out of work this winter." He also claims the importation of the Brush Marines into southern Oregon has worked a hardship on local labor when they were brought here from the east and allowed to stay when their time was out.

Somehow or other we get the idea that republican Powell doesn't like the Civilian Conservation corps. Whether his aversion to the Brush Marines is due to political prejudice or just plain misinformation is unknown to us, but we thought nearly everyone read of how hundreds of the Brush Marines brought here from other points were bundled up into trains at regular intervals and sent back to points of enlistment. But maybe Art doesn't even know what he reads in the papers.

On the other hand, how the resignation of CCC enrollees now to accept other jobs "will mean even more men out of work this winter" is most certainly a nut-cracker for us. We never heard of employment causing unemployment before. But then, Art is entitled to figure things out in his own way, and far be it from us to ever say anything about his ideas. Much.

One of President Roosevelt's finest acts, to our way of thinking, has been the establishment and maintenance of Brush Marine camps over the country.

And southern Oregon certainly can't have lost much by the importation of several thousand young men who are fed and clothed here and kept busy improving our forests, fighting our fires and building roads. Why, the government even pays cash for subscriptions to the Central Point American and The Jacksonville Miner, that its wards might be well informed.

Which is darned smart, Art will have to admit.

Predatory Animals Should Be Killed

According to news dispatches, there is some indication that the recent burning of the Morro Castle which resulted in terrific loss of life was of incendiary origin, probably traceable to an organization of international plotters commonly referred to as "reds."

If the accusation is true, it should be verified and lodged as another condemning indictment against all reds who plot and plan to make the going hard for humans and their governments. The ship fire is but one of hundreds of costly and greusome "red" stunts which have bothered not only America, but other nations as well.

California recently had her troubles with the reds (professional government-haters) and strike-torn regions everywhere are threatened by red activity and infection. That class of dangerous, violent criminal referred to as "reds" are a real, an irritating and costly menace and should be eliminated.

Southern Oregon knows well the only policy to persue in combating enemies of her forests. Parasites, insects and animals harmful to growing things are being sought out and killed. Camps have been established to eradicate pine beetles and dozens of other pests. Government is spending fortunes in protecting our national resources, and is concentrating a lot of effort in killing natural enemies of our forests.

Reds—the violent, criminally-inclined ones, are an even more deadly enemy of our country and should be dealt with in as logical, severe a manner as any other scourge. Beetles kill trees, so we kill the beetles. Reds are killing and maiming our people, undermining government and causing unrecorded damage in their meddling, vicious efforts throughout the country. They should be destroyed with the same vigor and thoroughness as their destructive insect cousins.

Of course, it would not be necessary to actually kill off the reds, but there are just as effective ways of ridding ourselves of such pests. They should be hunted, prosecuted, deported or incarcerated at every opportunity. We should forego tolerance with such insidious, sneaking and cowardly culprits.

And as for whatever may be the objective of the reds who resort to violence, sabotage and crime to gain their ends, despotism at the hands of the "under dogs," as they may class themselves, can never control an alleged despotism they claim to be fighting. A "red" is a predatory, destructive animal the world would be much better without.

Positive Proof

By J. C. REYNOLDS

When my partner and I came west many long years ago and settled on the Little Applegate, there were very few people here. A handful of prospectors, half a dozen ranchers and a lot of Indians were about all. Times were very hard, no work to be had and we soon began to wonder how we could make some money to live on. Finally we decided to go into a new field of business that did not seem to be overcrowded at the time.

The country was full of holes then so we decided to accumulate as many of these as possible and sell them to the Japanese, who could use them to crawl into in case of a war between them and the United States.

So we began to collect holes: pot holes, post holes, prospect holes, badger holes and knotholes, till eventually we had so many that it began to look like we had a corner on the hole business.

One day I patched up our old hay rack, loaded it heaping full of holes and started for Crescent City, from where I intended to ship them.

I did not notice that one of the sideboards had come loose and the holes had begun to spill out all along the road until I had arrived at the place where Ruch now is. Then, to my consternation, I saw as I looked around, that every one of the holes on that load had slipped off along the road somewhere and had been lost. This discouraged me so completely that I made no attempt to gather them up, but drove back to camp and told my partner I was going to quit.

Some people may not believe what I have said, but if they will drive over the road from Little Applegate to Ruch they will find all the holes I lost still laying where they fell from the hay rack that unlucky day of long ago.

And, further, some enterprising citizen has evidently taken the trouble to spill a few thousand bumps along this piece of highway, so that now it can claim the distinction of being the roughest stretch of roadbed anywhere in the United States, Canada or Missouri. I thank you.

WANTED: AN INFORMATION CLERK

By E. L. ADAMS

A stranger came by
And looked over the hole;
He squinted his eye:
"Are you getting any gold?"
"Is is coarse or is it fine?"
"Can I see its glistening yellow?"
"Oh dear! Wish t'was mine!"
"What makes it sort o' mellow?"
"How deep is it to bedrock?"
"Do you have to timber any?"
"Have you got much in your sock?"
"Is that piece worth a penny?"
"How much do you get for gold?"
"What do you use, a pick?"

"Is it hot or is it cold?"
"Do you use any 'quick'?"
"What's that on his head?"
"Is that a miner's candle?"
"Are you ever in the red?"
"Has a pick got a handle?"
"How do you stop the stuff?"
"Is that called bailing?"
"Would you even get enough?"
"Where do you put your tailings?"
"How often do you clean the box?"
"Is that granit, or is it slate?"
"What's that funny colored rock?"
"Can I watch you concentrate?"
"So that's called a gold pan?"
"Why the shake and spill?"
"Do you have much black sand?"
"Gee! This gives me a thrill!"
"Well, goodbye to you, my man,
"It looks like lots of fun;
"Good luck to you miners, and
"I hope you get a big one."

FOR BEAUTY . . . CONVENIENCE . . . SAFETY and HEALTH. As one pauses upon the threshold of a properly lighted living-room he should see several tempting vistas. Several persons should be able to find a comfortable place for reading or sewing. Many a woman economizing on light is sacrificing youthful looks to wrinkled weariness. Good light relieves eye-strain, often prevents headaches and nervousness and may prevent permanent eye injury. A new type of portable lamp makes good lighting possible with but little additional expense. It floods the entire room with shadowless light or serves as the conventional reading light . . . or both. Made by several manufacturers, it is for sale at your dealer's. Why not try one in YOUR living room tonight?
