Leaders Prepare To Launch Aid Plan

With the return this week of Oregon's delegation to the Salt Lake farm conference, preliminary steps for bringing the growers of this state the benefits of the new federal farm plan were expected by the OSC extension service to proceed rapidly.

Details of administration by which it is hoped that the new soil conservation act may be applied to the best advantage in the western states were worked out at the Salt Lake meeting through conferences of federal administrators, representative farmers and officials of the land grant colleges.

Oregon was represented at the conference by five producers four members of the state college staff, State Director of Agriculture Solomon T. White and the heads of several leading farm organizations. Producers invited by Secretary Wallace were A. E. Engbretson of Astoria; C. J. Hillard of Klamath Falls; Will Steen of Pendleton; A. R. Shumway of Milton and N. E. Dodd of Portland, who formerly lived at Baker. All of these producers have been active in previous AAA programs.

Delegates from the state college were W. A. Schoenfeld, dean of agriculture; F. L. Ballard, vice-director in charge of the extension service; E. L. Potter, head of the division of agricultural economics and N. C. Donaldson, federal compliance officer.

It is the hope of the national administration to get the cooperation of farmers to hold out approximately the same number of acres from surplus crops as would have been used for other purposes had the original crop control plan been allowed to stand. Under the new plan it is proposed to reimburse farmers who continue to devote a percentage of the land to soil improving crops or who switch from soil depleting to soil conserving crops.

The plan calls for local committees again, preferably made up of members who have had previous experience with the AAA programs.

H. R. Tolley of the University of California and a consultant in the planning section of the AAA, has been in Washington since the new program was launched and has helped in working out administrative procedure. He was in Oregon last winter and took part in the annual conference of agricultural workers at the state college where his ideas on the future development of agricultural adjustment were well received. M. L. Wilson, formerly of Montana and now assistant secretary of agriculture, has also had a major part in shaping the new program. Both of these men are thoroughly familiar with western conditions, Oregon leaders point out.

A. M. Beaver returned home from southern California last Saturday, having spent the fall and winter with his sons and a daughter and their families.
