FOR GLAMOUR

A wrap for glamour—not for warmth — is shown in fuchsia-colored silk net over a sheath-like formal gown of printed satin. The long sleeved, high necked wrap changes the decollete gown into a dinner dress. The colors in the dress are blue and fuchsia on a pale orchid ground.

Milady's Aid by FRAN

DO YOU like to go to baseball games? Band concerts? And when you do go, don't you like to wear a pretty, cool, light dress? And aren't you generally hesitant about doing so because of the dusty stands and benches?

Well, today we have a brand new idea for you, if your answers are yes. We all hate to appear fussy by brushing painstakingly (and usually vainly) at the dusty seat. There is nothing appealing to the eye in a spread newspaper or wrapping paper. A blanket to sit on is bulky and conspicuous to carry.

So why don't you get a roll of common cellophane wrapping paper and a roll of dry-backed adhesive tape. If the cellophane is not square, cut it to the desired size, bind it with tape so that it will not tear, and presto, you have just the thing to protect your clothing from the dust of the rough seats. Its advantages? It is glistening and modern in appearance. It folds up as small or smaller than your hanky and will go into your purse easily. It is inexpensive, practical because it is absolutely non-porous, and can even match your accessories if you desire color.

Before the Job's Daughters dance the other night, several of the girls were heard complaining about the necessity of putting a coat over the frills and swooks of their best formals. Of course it has been a bit cool to go without a warm wrap so far, but here is a suggestion for future reference. Even when it is warm, a wrap of some sort should be worn, and this is one that will positively add glamour to your gown—and you can make it yourself.

From sheer white organdy fashion a circular yoke that fits smoothly down to the tip of your shoulders. This is the foundation for a wrist length cape, which may be as full or as plain or as ruffled as you care to have it. After you have gathered or pleated lengths of organdy to the yoke, get two yards of burgundy, royal blue, or rust colored wide velvet ribbon; tack it, crushed, all around the outer edge of the yoke, and leave the ends loose in front so that the cape may be tied on with a jaunty bow. The length may be altered to suit your particular build, and the wrap may be colored in any manner that pleases you.

Just one WHY NOT for this time: WHY NOT get two-thirds of a yard of white flannel, fashion a plain, sleeveless, short bolero from it, and then with brilliant colored yarns embroider a wide border all the way around it. Simply let your imagination run riot and make up your pattern as you go along with no respect for blending of colors and no attempt at a sensible design. That's the way the Russian peasants do it. Wear it ver any of your cool summer dresses.

The etiquette question today comes from a young man who is still confused by that harassing question, "Where shall I walk when accompanying two ladies down the street?" On the outside, always—the side next to the street. This is a rule you can follow without fail, and know that you are right.
