Coming To Ashland Monday!

Glimpses of Some of the Many Features Carried by Russell Brothers Circus

A newspaper or magazine is able to give a great volume of reading matter for a few cents because of its vast circulation. On the same principle, a circus provides a maximum of entertainment at small cost because of the great numbers of people it is able to show to each day. This will be amply demonstrated Monday, July 26, when Russell Brothers Circus comes to Ashland for two performances.

The manager of Russell Brothers Circus has arranged his performance in much the same way the editor of a newspaper plans the contents of its columns. Corresponding to the daily run of telegraph and local news are certain standard acts of the circus as, for example, fine performing horses, elephants, acrobats and aerialists. Analogous to regular departments—the weather reports, market quotations, box scores, and the like—are the menagerie, side-shows and refreshment stands. And, just as a newspaper has distinctive features such as its editorials and special columns, the circus has special acts and attractions not to be found on any other show. The exciting events which take place in the circus wild west exhibition may be compared to the sport pages. The clowns, of course, furnish the necessary comedy relief just as cartoons and comic strips in the newspaper.

The circus man and editor both cater to people of all classes, ages and tastes. The beautiful, glittering costumes of the circus are of feminine appeal just as news and pictures of the latest trends in fashions. Men may be more interested in the system and precision maintained in the operation of the circus just as their newspaper interest swings to political news and the market columns. But while a child's perusal of a newspaper often is confined to the comics, there is little about a circus that escapes his interest.
