Potato Growers To Vote On Control Plan

All potato growers in 18 Oregon counties who normally harvest three acres or more of potatoes will be asked to cast a ballot not later than Saturday, September 25, on the question of establishing voluntary regulation of commercial potato acreage under the AAA. Arrangements for the referendum have been completed by the extension service at Oregon State college at the request of Washington officials.

The referendum is being taken only in counties where, according to the 1934 agricultural census, there are located 50 or more farms on which 200 bushels or more of potatoes were produced. Oregon counties coming under this classification are Baker, Clackamas, Columbia, Coos, Crook, Deschutes, Hood River, Klamath, Lane, Lincoln, Linn, Malheur, Marion, Multnomah, Umatilla, Union, Washington and Yamhill.

The question on which the growers will be asked to ballot is, "Are you in favor of establishing a potato acreage goal for each commercial potato farm in connection with the 1938 agricultural conservation program?"

The proposed goal system would have the county committee in each designated commercial county recommend a potato acreage goal and average per acre yield of potatoes for each farm which normally plants three acres or more of potatoes. These goals would be based on average acreages and yields for 1936 and '37, with such adjustments as necessary to compensate for abnormal weather or other conditions in these years. A farmer who accepted such a goal and did not exceed it in 1938 would qualify for payments under the agricultural conservation act, while those who exceed it would have deductions made from any other payments due under the agricultural conservation program.

AAA officials have been asked by the industry to attempt such voluntary control as a means of stabilizing annual production in the interest of both producer and consumer. The officials say that no program will be initiated unless it has the full support of the potato industry. Under the proposed plan no goals would be set up for farmers who do not produce potatoes on a commercial scale.

Council Will Meet On Tuesday Night

Regular meeting of the Ashland city council will be held Tuesday evening in the council chambers with several matters of importance on the slate for discussion.

Postponement from last Tuesday was made because of absence of Mayor T. S. Wiley and Councilmen Dr. W. E. Blake and Dr. W. J. Crandall.
