Chief Talent Wired For Sound at Station

CHIEF OF POLICE C. F. TALENT Monday was proudly displaying in his office a handsomely executed certificate of life membership in the Hot Squat society, honorary (or ornery) local fraternity of the Ashland fire department. Sealed officially and illuminated by a jagged streak of lightning, the document is complete with the following self-explanatory text:

"To whom it may concern, greetings:

"These presents attest that Chief of Police Charlie Talent has undergone the corporeal stimulation, experienced the excitement, felt in its fulsome and protracted extent the ordeal of Electric Chair, the terrible see situated in the recreation room of the Ashland fire department's quarters located in the city hall, at Ashland, in the county of Jackson, state of Oregon—so help us, hosenem!

"Furthermore, and stuff—that said party of the first part showed plainly evident ability to Take It, that said party retained his physiological composure, maintained an even tenor of temper, and passed the trial not only with flying colors but in such a manner as to be recommended for and receive honorable mention.

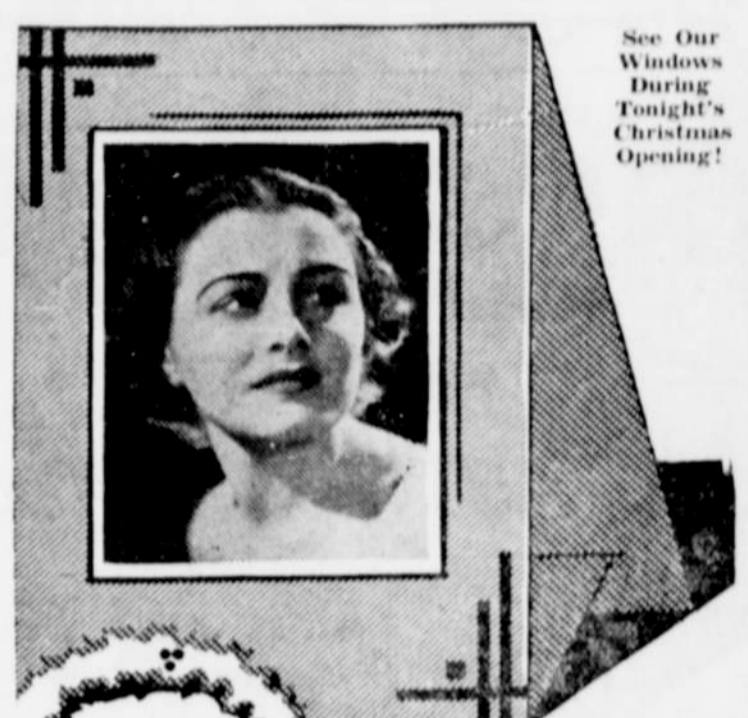

"Though it must be admitted in all truth that said party showed signs of getting a hot shot of high voltage electricity in the seat of his pants and adjacent parts, and that said party quivered ardently, to say the least—and who wouldn't!

"To all of which we hereby, herein, hereon and therefore set our hands and seal this 29th day of November, 1937, in solemn commemoration of that dire event last evening above described—and we do mean dire.
