O.S.C. BUILDS FIRST OREGON SEISMOGRAPH

OREGON STATE COLLEGE—No longer will earth tremors here or in surrounding states go un-honored and unsung since the building and installation here of the first seismograph in the state of Oregon. Long a dream and "spare-time project" of the physics department of the school of science, the seismograph has finally been put into operation, thanks to the early work of H. R. Vinyard, instructor in physics, and the later work of W. H. Moore and Miss Chung Kwai Lui, graduate assistants.

Coos Bay Coals Show Good Results in Test

Representative lots of coal from Coos Bay mines were sent to the northwest experiment station of the bureau of mines, U. S. Department of the Interior, at Seattle, by the Oregon State Department of Geology and Mineral Industries as a part of the study being made by the latter organization of the utilization of various Oregon mineral resources. These samples of Oregon coal were subjected to critical tests by the bureau of mines to determine burning characteristics, overall efficiencies and other properties. As a result of this work the bureau concludes that "a high recovery of useful heat was obtained from the samples of Coos Bay coals despite their low heating values," and further "concludes that both coals could be used efficiently for house heating purposes with equipment similar to that employed in conducting these trials."

In this case, a common type of overfeed domestic stoker and hot-water boiler was used. Samples were sent from the J. H. Flanagan property and from the Alpine Coal company mine, both in the Coos Bay district. Although differing slightly in detail, the tests showed the coals, which are of subbituminous rank, to give essentially the same overall efficiencies. These efficiencies at different burning rates ranged from 69 per cent to 78 per cent, with an average of about 75 per cent. Details of the tests included the feed rate per hour, btu output per hour, analysis of the coal, excess air supplied, and burning losses.

These tests and the conclusions reached by Dr. H. F. Yancey, supervising engineer of the bureau of mines experiment station, indicate that Coos Bay coal is entirely suitable for domestic use on overfeed stokers and that it is worthy of consideration by coal users in western Oregon.

The facts indicate that all too little attention is being paid by people in Oregon to the possibilities of savings to be made by buying and demanding Oregon coals.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Madden and son Bob of Klamath Falls visited here over the week-end with friends and relatives.

VISITOR, RELUCTANT TO PAY FINE, LANGUISHES

Charles H. Pettinger, from the wilds of lower Rogue river, declared Monday "I wasn't drunk, I was overcome with carbon monoxide gas" when haled into Judge C. O. Presnall's police court on a charge of being drunk on a public street.

Main and Second streets early Saturday evening, Pettinger was so "gassed" he smelled like a brewery and had to be helped into the police car, according to police, and was unable to tell his name or whether he had a car or not. After languishing in jail until Wednesday, demanding his "rights" all the while, Pettinger persuaded a friend to buy him out by paying $10 fine and $2.50 costs.
