eyes stay bright with MEASURED LIGHT

Every seeing task requires a certain amount of light, and less than that amount causes eyestrain. That's why it is so important to have the home, where eyes are called upon for every sort of seeing, adequately lighted in every room. Eyestrain is no respecter of persons — it includes young and old among its victims, and pounces as quickly at home as at school or office.

The new I E S lamps for every room in the house are your best assurance against eyestrain. These lamps are scientifically designed to give correct light. They are well designed, and add to the decorative effect of the room in which they are used. There are floor, bridge, table and wall models in several designs, all with reflector globes that give a soft, diffused, but adequate light.
