TURKEY OUTLOOK UP FOR 1939 SEASON

Turkey production in Oregon, as well as throughout the United States, is expected to continue upward in 1939 and yet turkey growers may have a reasonably favorable season when net returns are calculated. This is the conclusion reached in the annual turkey outlook contained in the current Agricultural Situation and Outlook issued by the OSC extension service and dealing with turkeys, potatoes, horses and mules and current farm price trends. Copies may be obtained free from any extension office.

The expected continuation of a stronger demand for turkeys and the prospect of continued low feed prices are favorable factors in the turkey outlook. The government's survey of producers' intentions, released in mid-March, indicated a 27 percent increase in the turkey crop this year compared with last. A year ago the government predicted a 6 percent increase which was not quite reached by actual production in 1938.

Unfavorable factors are increases in competing meats, larger cold storage stocks of turkeys and larger breeding flocks to be marketed after the laying season is over.

Cash income from Oregon's turkey crop in 1938 was estimated at nearly four million dollars, making turkeys one of the state's most important specialty crops, the report shows. Oregon now ranks about fifth among the states in turkey production and has an output twice as great as in 1929 when the last general census was taken.

Potato acreage is expected to decrease in 1939, which, with other factors, makes the potato situation appear more favorable than at the beginning of 1938.

The national farm price index was down two points more as of February 15 and is five points below a year ago. Chief factors in the lower index compared with last year are the grain index off 23 points and dairy products down 14. Fruits and meat animals are up 10 and six points, respectively, compared with 1938.
