Dangerous Danny To Meet Aztec Battler At Armory Monday Eve

That tough little Irishman, Dangerous Danny McShain, world's lightweight wrestling champion, returns to Medford armory next Monday night where Mack Lillard has him carded with Phil Romano, the big Aztec Indian from Mexico City. There isn't a more cocky man in the mat industry than McShain nor do they come any tougher. Romano made a big hit around these parts about a year and a half ago when he went through the best material Lillard could get for him with a surprising number of wins. In taking on McShain the Indian will have to mix considerable dirt with the scientific angle if he wants to go home with the bacon. Jimmy Lott and Polish Joe Smolinski will resume their feud which started unofficially last week in the middle go. Smolinski wanted Lott's stool before the latter was ready to leave the ring last Monday and when the Polish meanie became abusive Lott Sonnenburged him all over the ring before the Pole had removed his robe. A newcomer will take part in the opener. He is Vern Clark, a great wrestler from Michigan who takes on the Persian, Emir Boudi, who made such a hit with the fans last week.

11 College Hoopmen Get Letter Sweaters

Eleven basketball lettermen of Coach Jean Eberhart's 1939 Southern Oregon Normal school varsity squad will be honored and eulogized at 6:15 o'clock tonight in the Lithia hotel dining room when they will be presented with their letter sweaters by members of the Southern Oregon College association and business men, according to Bert Miller, president of the group.

Each letterman will be guest of a local business man, and the dinners will hear Representative Earl Newberry speak on efforts made to secure a dormitory for the college. Players to receive sweaters include Bill Hoxie, Darrell Leavens, Frank Marchi, Jack Kemnitz, Walt Sether, Ray Haaga, Bob Durbin, Jack Cady and George Bullion, and Managers Ralph Brickey and Hugh Smith.

Pieffer Opening New Inn at City Limits

Vic Pieffer, for several years chef at the Plaza cafe, Saturday will open his own establishment, Vic's Inn, at the Bungalow Auto court just south of the city limits on the Pacific highway. Until recently owned by H. E. Curtis, the place was known as the Bungalow coffee shop and is at the site of the recently uncovered prehistoric bones. Pieffer will cater especially to dinner parties, and will feature special dinners week nights and Sundays. The inn's menu will include half fried chicken sandwiches as a regular feature as well as other special sandwiches.

Fire Consumes Barn Here Monday Night

Fire of undetermined origin destroyed the W. E. Moor dairy barn at Water and Stanley streets Monday evening. Besides the barn, one heifer calf was lost, about 22 tons of hay and about eight tons of dairy feed. A small shed and milk house also were damaged by the flames, which attracted valley-wide attention when they lighted the sky for many miles around. The large structure was enveloped in flames when firemen arrived. Insurance coverage included $400 on the building and $400 on contents, according to Moor, who said the barn would be replaced.

KOAC Files Request For Power Increase

Formal amended application for permission to construct a 5000 watt transmitting set for KOAC at Corvallis, replacing the present 1000 watt set, has been filed with the Federal Communications Commission by officials of Oregon State college. Expansion this year, if permission is granted by the FCC, is made possible by special appropriation passed by the state legislature. KOAC is also preparing for the rehearing ordered by the FCC on the petition of KOY, Phoenix, Ariz., to use the KOAC wavelength. Since the rehearing was granted KOY has made at least four attempts to have the rehearing order reversed or altered, KOAC officials have been notified. All these requests have been denied by the FCC. If the increase in power is granted and the station wins its fight to prevent outside interference, KOAC will be in position to reach the entire state with increased strength and quality of signal, engineers at the college say.

APRIL FOOLS' DAY

For almost four centuries practical jokers have had one day each year—April 1st—in which to victimize their friends.

Thought to have originated in France in connection with the calendar reformation of 1564, All Fools' day spread rapidly and today is observed in many lands, particularly our own. Even the children aren't safe. This lad, finding the jam jar, is unpleasantly surprised when a five-foot "snake" lunges at him.

Smokers, natural prey of tricksters, have good cause to be wary. Here an exploding match, handed the unhappy smoker, adds little to his enjoyment.

Whenever a harassed guest strikes a match, all the remaining matches in this trick box jump out. The polite guest, often unaware, will pick them up again. The hardened practical joker appreciates this.

No matter how steady your nerves, it is disconcerting to have a repulsive looking snake leap at you when a friend offers you a light from his new mechanical gadget.
