TRAVEL STATISTICS ARE NOT CAR REGISTRATION'S ONLY VALUE TO OREGON!

According to a news story from Salem, tourist travel figures indicate that some out-of-state cars are not being registered in Oregon. The presumption is that such a revelation will sound the death knell of the car registering requirement during next session of the Oregon legislature.

However, if legislators believe the only value to Oregon of the registration requirement is that of travel statistics, then they are overlooking the requirement's principal benefit-that of offering a valuable contact with the tourist. In the Ashland office, which leads all others in the state for total registrations, the daily contacts become friendly greeting of guests, a bid to tourists to make themselves feel at home in Oregon. Many priceless contacts are made every month of value to the state, the community and the tourist.

To say that the law is a hick statute is to employ a thoughtless play on words. The registration requirement does no one an injury, causes little inconvenience and gives opportunity for registration offices to distribute information about the state, the community and recreations. Most tourists appreciate the friendly, cordial greetings and the authoritative advice given in the Ashland office, and if other portals are not a. considerate, then they should be disciplined tact oportunities.

WILLKIE LOST STATURE SATURDAY WHEN HE RESORTED TO CLAPTRAP!

Tuning in with expectation of hearing an acceptance speech of outstanding persuasion and eloquence, this department last Saturday actually was disappointed at the fumbling of opportunity which characterized all of Presidential Nominee Wendell Willkie's address.

Believing that Wendell was a dynamic super-personality who'd swept the Philadelphia convention off its feet and who even was converting old-line democrats to his faith, The Miner editor sat before his radio fully expecting to be half-won by this wonder boy. We had begun to suspect that Willkie was of such caliber that perhaps a republican victory in November probably would hurt the country little, might be a wholesome improvement. But after listening to Nominee land, described Deed Record 155, Page 467. Willkie's acceptance address and analyzing its text, he lost considerable stature with us. He sounded more like an egomaniac than a statesman of the hour.

The Miner had hoped, for the general welfare of the nation, that Roosevelt's opponent would be a man of equal ability and sincerity. If he were, then we had little to fear regardless of how the ballots added up in November. But when the republican nominee dishes up such trite tripe as his accusing Roosevelt of "warmongering and trying to create a war hysteria, and then doing nothing to build up our national defenses," then certainly he is nothing more than just another politician insulting voters' intelligence with distorted

Also we were disappointed to hear Willkie outline a foreign policy surprisingly parallel to that advocated by Col. Charles A. Lindbergh in Chicago a few days before. The suspicion arises that Lindy's appeasement talk may have been a trial balloon for the party's as yet undecided foreign policy. It almost was astonishing to hear a presidential candidate criticize Roosevelt for condemning Hitler's butchery.

During last two presidential elections republicans had revealed political bankruptcy-a deficit in ideas and constructive thinking. Willkie was built up as the find of the decade, the plumed knight who came a-riding at the crisis. But if Willkie is less barren of constructive thinking than his predecessors, he failed to show it in his acceptance speech.

Millions of voters in the United States still are
