BETTER OUTLOOK REPORTED BY OSC ON FARM MARKET

Moderately improved farm market prospects in general are indicated from information just published by the Oregon agricultural extension service, at least for crops showing no material increase in available supplies for market during the 1940-41 season.

The improvement is expected to be associated with the somewhat higher level of consumer purchasing power expected in the current marketing season compared with 1939-40. Domestic demand is expected to improve more than enough to offset poorer foreign demand prospects owing to the war.

The report deals more specifically with market prospects for apples, potatoes, turkeys, and walnuts, all important commercial products of Oregon which are marketed largely during the fall and winter months. The full report containing this market prospects information is available from county agents or direct from the college. It is intended to assist producers and marketing men in analyzing the situation and market prospects in relation to marketing the products they have produced for sale.

Another section of the extension service report deals with farm income prospects for Oregon in 1940 and indicates a probable gain of around five per cent over 1939 owing to a higher general average farm price level in 1940 and probably a slight increase in gross volume of production.

Considerable data are given on imports of forage crop seeds, receipts of which from foreign countries have declined sharply during recent months compared with the same period last year. The decline is attributed partly to interference with international trade by the war and partly to increased domestic production to meet domestic needs.

"Daddy telephoned last night from way off somewhere"

"Mother says folks didn't have telephones once upon a time and she wonders what they ever did without them. Just think, she says, how tired she'd be, if our telephone wasn't here to help her do her errands every day. And tonight, she says, Daddy will call us from 'way, way off, to say Good-night and tell us when he'll be home. I'm going to stay right here beside the telephone until Daddy calls. I'm going to ask him what Mother means when she says, every night, 'Little girl, sleep safe: we have a telephone!'"
