A Lecture on Christian Science

Entitled: "Spiritual Achievement Through the Understanding of Christian Science."

By Lucia C. Coulson, C. S. B. of London, England

It is sometimes asked how we dare to claim spiritual perfection for man when on every side there are evidences that he is both sick and sinful. The answer is that we do not claim this for a mortal. This distinction is made so clearly and convincingly by Christ Jesus in his conversation with Nicodemus that it is worth while to consider that story. When the ruler of the Jews came to him and questioned him, Jesus said that to see the kingdom a man must be born again, or as the exact translation has it, "be born from above." "That which is born of the flesh is flesh," he continued, "and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." One is mortal, the other immortal. These two never mingle, although like the wheat and the tares they seem to grow side by side. That which is of the flesh remains mortal, imperfect, that which is of the Spirit, sinless, stainless, immaculate. Therefore we do not make a mortal good, but let the mortal give place little by little to the immortal. In so doing what appears to take place is the emergence of a better, happier, and healthier human being. What does it mean to be born of the Spirit? It means that the Christ-idea awakes in us, which from then on is the governing factor of our experience. It means that the intellectual acceptance of Truth bows before a knowing of Truth's actuality, which is beyond all argument and beyond all doubting, because it is an inward conviction of that which is. Its first fruit is joy, and with it comes always a lessening of the trust in materiality. The mortal has begun in however small a degree to withdraw. That which is born from above has nothing of the human about it. Being spiritual only, it is indestructible.

Is there any experience equal in importance and desirability to this new birth? Without it we have only the letter, therefore without it heaven is not opened. With it the divine possibilities begin to unfold and even our human experience is bathed in a new and fairer light. If that light sometimes does not seem to last it is only because a further rebirth is necessary, for as Mrs. Eddy tells us, the new birth goes on continually until we reach eternity.

How do we gain the new birth? Nicodemus laid down prejudice, and was ready to learn and to inquire from one who had less authority an learning humanly than himself. And it was night when he came to Jesus. If it is night with you, be of good cheer, for that is the moment when the mortal is most ready to yield and when the idea of beauty and glory which is your true selfhood is most likely to appear. It is this man "born of the Spirit" which Christian Science claims for each of us as perfect and spiritual and demonstrable. The maintaining of this truth about man brings the spiritual idea into view and results in healing.

Hung by Thumb in Tiny 'Trap', Freezing Rancher Signals Aid

Scene near Chase ranch, where freezing weather begins in September and thermometer drops to 18 below zero. Inset, A. M. Chase.

WITH a steel ring driven through his thumb, linking him securely to a wire fence on a remote part of his Idaho ranch, A. M. Chase, of Sebastopol, Calif., stood in the darkness of a winter night trying to figure out how he could escape freezing to death before help might come.

He had gone out alone to finish building a pen into which he was going to put some pheasants the next morning. The sides and top of the pen were made of heavy wire mesh nailed to four posts. As a quick and cheap way of linking together the edges of the side and top wires, Chase was using "hog-rings," jointed steel rings with sharp points which snap together and lock.

It was getting dark, with a heavy wind and sleet storm beating about him, as the rancher began putting in the last of the rings. To reach the top of the wire, some eight feet from the ground, he had to stand on tip-toe, pulling the wire together and inserting the rings with his left hand, then using the other to snap the steel circles together. As he reached up to put in a final ring he missed the edge of the side wire, driving the ring points through his left thumb. In an instant he was locked to the edge of the top wire, hung up by one arm.

After the first shock of pain, Chase tried to concentrate on figuring out a way to get loose. He kept his arm as motionless as possible, but had to struggle to remain on his tip-toes. The pain continued to be intense because with each wavering motion of his body the ring points sank deeper through his thumb.

He was soon becoming exhausted by this effort and the chill of the sleet storm. He could not break the wire, and he had no pliers with which to open the ring. Then he thought of a possible way of getting help, although it seemed like a forlorn hope.

"Using my free hand, I got my flashlight out of a hip pocket," Chase said. "I snapped the switch and, facing around as much as I could, I pointed the beam off in the direction of the ranch house. This light had fresh batteries in it, and thanks to them I was finally able to locate the house."

"I tried to play the light on the windows, but this was not easy. Strung up as I was, the beam wavered and swung about, but I kept on, although about all in from pain, cold and exhaustion. At least one of the boys noticed the light on the glass and stepped outside to see what was going on. Then they came on the run and cut me loose. It was none too soon."

Chase faced the loss of his thumb owing to the deepness of the wound and the possibility of infection. But prompt care and good luck have brought him through.
