

News on Fight to Stop Inflation To Reach Widely

Control of rising prices is of vital interest to every man, woman and child whether livelihood comes from farm, factory, or industry, according to those now engaged in enlisting public support of the national program against inflation.

Here in Oregon, as in all other states, the state college extension service has been assigned the task of carrying information on the program to every rural and farm family in the state. Ways of doing this were considered in a four-state conference of extension officials and OPA representatives in Spokane.

"Only through widespread understanding can a program involving voluntary action of all citizens be carried out," said William A. Schoenfeld, dean and director of agriculture, following the conference. "As an educational agency the extension service has been requested to reach every rural family with information on the program aimed at preventing runaway prices and inflation. Control of inflation is essential in winning the war, and in resuming normal life in the peace which follows."

The national program contemplates fair treatment of all elements of the population, even though adjustments may be needed in addition to steps already announced.

Runaway prices in the first world war brought post-war disaster for farmers even more than other classes of the population, federal officials point out. When the price spree ended in the early twenties, the index of farm prices dropped 130 points in a single year. Thousands of farmers lost their farms because prices first went too far up and then too far down.

Here in Oregon more than half of the population is classified as rural in the 1940 census. Under plans being worked out by the extension service, it is hoped to reach every rural family during the month of June with information on its part in the price control program. The extension service organizations, OPA representatives, and other agencies of the federal government in carrying out the informational program.

A BIT OF NONSENSE

One Sunday in a certain colored church the senior deacon failed to provide the wine for the communion service. No one discovered it until it was almost too late and then there was a hasty conference with heads close together in the back row of the church. It was finally decided to accept the aid of an old sister living next door who offered to bring over some of her wine. No one had a suspicion as to what kind of wine it was until all had been served and then it dawned on the congregation that it must have been made out of persimmons. The parson was stumped for a moment, but he quickly became equal to the situation.

"Brethern and sistern," he announced, with yo' all's approval, we's gwine to omit singing de Doxology. We's jes gwine to whistle it!"

"Why do you say that beautiful photograph of your wife was a snapshot?"

"Well, it must have been. Her mouth was shut."

A recruiting sergeant was trying to convince a half-wit that he wasn't mentally suited for the army. He asked him: "What would happen if I would cut off one of your ears?"

The fellow said: "I could hear just half as well."

"Well, what would happen if I would cut off both your ears?"

"I couldn't see."

The sergeant asked: "Well, why wouldn't you be able to see if I cut off both your ears?" Thinking he had him. "Because my hat would fall down over my eyes."
