Jacob's Vision of God.
Lesson for August 23: Genesis 28: 10-22.
Golden Text: Genesis 28: 15.

After Jacob secured Esau's birthright and deceived his father, he departed for the ancestral home of his mother. Ostensibly he went to take a wife in Harlan but in reality he was fleeing from the wrath of his brother.

The hymn, "Nearer My God to Thee," followed the experiences of Jacob at Bethel. The ladder he saw in his dream may be a beautiful symbol of prayer—angels ascend to bear petitions and other angels descend with rich answers. Above the ladder Jacob saw God and heard his promises of blessings to him and his descendants.

When Jacob arose he realized that God was in that place. He may have fancied that he had fled from God when he fled from Esau, but God was there and God is everywhere. Profoundly impressed that God was mindful of him, he consecrated the place and named it Bethel. Where the ladder of his dream had rested he lifted the pillar of sacrifice.

Jacob's vow shows that early in history the title was recognized as belonging to God. But the doctrine of stewardship, which Jesus taught, shows that all we have belongs to God.

It cannot be claimed that Jacob's life, after his vision of God, was without faults. But certainly at Bethel he learned to pray. And throughout his long life he was ever influenced by the fact that in youth he had found the house of God and the gate of heaven.

Marines Land in South Sea Island

Shown here are tractors of the U. S. marine corps, as they were driven ashore somewhere in the South Sea Islands. This action occurred during a simulated landing by the marines, as they established an outpost for Uncle Sam, and is probably typical of the manner in which U. S. marines landed in the Solomon Islands, with supporting assaults by Allied airmen. (Official U. S. marine photo).
