ALV. ROBERT H. HARPER

Joseph Sold Into Slavery Lesson for Sept. 13: Genesis 37:

In the sordid story of brothers selling Joseph into slavery, we note the love of a father for his favorite son whom his dearly loved Rachel had borne him, the unsuccessful ruse of Reuben to deliver Joseph, and the envy and hatred of men who sent their own brother to the slave market.

Reuben tried to save Joseph by having Joseph cast into a pit, intending later to deliver him to his father: Judah saved Joseph from death by persuading the others to sell him into slavery.

Having sold Joseph to the Midianites, the wicker brothers hoped they had hid their crime by sending the blood-stained coat of Joseph to their father. But we learn in this, as in uncounted instances, that crime cannot be hid. Even in that day it was learned by the guilty that the world is really quite small. At the present, with improved communication, it is marvelous how quickly and surely crime is detected and the guilty brought to justice.

The wicked brothers thought they had covered their crime and that they were rid of the dreamer and his dreams. But as an old hymn has it, "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform." In succeeding pages we shall see how God used even the evil plans of the brothers to work out his own plans for his people.

SUCCESSFUL PARENTHOOD

By MRS. CATHERINE CONRAD EDWARDS Associate Editor, Parents' Magazine

It seem to me that young people EXAMINER COMING today have an increased respect for a moral code in regard to relations between the sexes. Although their conversation may sometimes be alarmingly frank there is a quality of decency and wholesomeness about them which is very reassuring. Moreover they do not wait for the older generation to censure those of their number who are lax in morals—the latter simply don't rate with the crowd. In other words, it is no longer considered smart to be either a "wolf" or a girl of wobbly principles. However, girls have always had to face, and probably always will, some disparity between conduct which they were taught was proper and conduct which the more daring of their friends appear to be getting away with. How can you prepare them for this? By neiping them to understand that the good time earned at the expense of morals is always "second pest." No young person wants to compromise-youth has a natural scorn for "second bests." But most of their mistakes come from grabbing at life because they are afraid they will miss out. If Age could only pass on to Youth one bit of knowledge-that most of us eventually, get what we really want in life-perhaps they could be helped to recognize and pass up the "second bests" which crowd us when we are young.

Much of the fault lies in our teaching-we dwell on the penalties of not living up to the moral code when on every side, in fiction and the movies, sometimes in the lives of their friends, they see evidence that these penalties aren't always exacted. What they can't see is the inner emptiness of those who dissipate their emotions. Because, religion aside, the value of morals is that they help us to preserve personal integrity, they keep us all in one place, to paraphrase the psychologists.

But if we would present the moral code to young people as a dynamic thing, not as something which denies them good times but as something which builds their capacity for happiness, we give it meaning. For every new app
