Ellsworth, New Senator Grateful for Support

ROSEBURG, Ore., Nov. 12—Returning to his home here from a brief business trip, which followed his election November 3 as congressman from the new Fourth district, Harris Ellsworth, editor of the Roseburg News-Review found his editorial desk piled high with hundreds of letters and telegrams from all parts of the state.

"I am extremely grateful for the support given me during the recent campaign and the messages received since my election," Ellsworth said. "I particularly appreciate the congratulations from my democratic rival candidate, Mr. Edward C. Kelly, who was one of the first to wire his wishes for a successful term. I hope soon to be able to acknowledge personally the many courtesies shown me, but it will be impossible for me to reach all to whom I owe the deepest thanks. I desire to assure all of my active supporters, the voters who endorsed my candidacy, and all residents of the Fourth district that I sincerely appreciate their cooperation and will strive to faithfully represent them in congress."

Jean Eberhart Writes Article For Esquire

Jean Eberhart, director of athletics at Southern Oregon College of Education, has written an article for the December ESQUIRE, called CROW'S-NEST BASKETBALL. It's really authoritative, for Mr. Eberhart is the originator of the idea of crow's-nest officiating. In ESQUIRE he points out the advantages of this innovation, the main one being that to put the basketball referees in crow's nests gives them perfect vision plus safety from fast dribblers, leaving a clear deck for the players.

Mr. Eberhart has a rich basketball history. His first triumph was when the Eugene High School team, of which he was captain, won the state championship in 1927 and participated in the national interscholastic championships in Chicago. At the University of Oregon he was regular center on the freshman team and starred for the varsity for three years. He was captain in his last season and was named on numerous all-star selections.

He later played on independent teams that won the Oregon AAU title, the northwest YMCA championship, among others. After coaching at University High School in Eugene, he went to Southern Oregon College of Education, at Ashland, to be director of athletics.

In his article, Mr. Eberhart explains the essence of his revolutionary idea—that of raising basketball referees above floor level, to give them better vision of the floor and to keep them out of the way of the players. "It is," he says "the best cure for blindness the world has ever seen."

When Mr. Eberhart initiated his idea at a game between the Oregon College of Education and the Southern Oregon College of Education, the referees were delighted with this new plan. It freed them from the sweat and toil they were used to but never liked, and gave them a chance to do a vastly superior job. They said after the first game, that they were amazed at the ease with which they could follow play and see every bit of action. New vistas were opened to them. Player behavior that had previously looked foul was now clean, clever action. Fouls that formerly escaped them were now easily discernable.

The system has many other assets, too. The crow's nest is an excellent training ground for referees of the future. Novices can help in the crow's nest, and get valuable experience for officiating at the same time. Another advantage of this new system is that it will prolong the earning period and service to basketball, of good referees who have heretofore had their careers cut short when their legs gave out.

So far, so good, for the crow's nest system of officiating! It has met only with avorable comment, concludes ESQUIRE, and looks like a boon to the game!

Livestock Trucking Needs Law Protection Livestock that is hauled by truck needs just as much supervision as that hauled by rail, yet most of the laws that have to do with sanitary livestock disease control relate only to livestock moved by railroads, points out Dr. W. H. Lytle, chief of the animal industry division of the state department of agriculture.

"Partial transportation control is not effective control," he declares, adding that it is quite important that laws be brought up to date so that all forms of transportation of livestock be under the same sanitary regulations.

ASHLAND U. S. O.

Harkins and Mrs. Marcella Rawe, senior hostesses assisted soldiers search for a cook book for a two-egg cake that would fit into a new pan in the USO kitchen.

During the day a group of soldiers and junior hostesses baked a devil's food cake and served it while Staff Sergeant Bruce and Junior Hostess Betty Bowling made fudge. Later Mrs. Frank VanDyke arrived fresh and interested to take the place of a weary staff member and Miss Oille Depew came with silhouette paper for the Saturday profile cutting. Miss Marian Ady instructed a group of soldiers in block printing Christmas cards.

A Saturday evening snack was served of hamburgers and cookies furnished by Mrs. Clyde Dunham.

Among visitors of the day were a sailor and a soldier on furlough enroute home, having seen actual warfare in the South Pacific and Alaskan zones. The USO was delighted to provide hot showers and home hospitality.

Miss Alta Norcross at the information desk in the late afternoon reported interest in the ping-pong games and Bernia Haight's Music Hour, our blind volunteer's.

The Ashland USO has recently been fortunate to have two or three soldier artists whose work contributed to the interest of visitors at the center. Sgt. An-covina from Camp White made a crayon portrait; another made a pencil sketch portrait, and still another picture portrayed a idyllic boating scene with a uniformed youth kissing a girl, very appropriately named "A Soldier's Dream".

Mr. and Mrs. George Gates of Medford were recent visitors to the Ashland center.

Mrs. Gladys Doods, chairman of soldiers' service, announces a shortage of bath towels and requests that those who volunteered to give towels will please leave these at the USO.
