These Things Come Not Back

By Ruth Taylor

There is an old proverb taken from the Persian—"Four things come not back—the spoken word, the sped arrow, the past life and the neglected opportunity."

"The spoken word." It is not the fine things we have said that come back to us. What haunts us is the careless word, the critical speech, the unconscious cruelty. The times we misunderstood or misinterpreted our neighbor's action, the hasty generalization, the rumor repeated as though it were fact, the unkind gossip, are what we remember. If we are sincere in our endeavors to do right, these things plague us. These are the words that hurt us as deeply as those against whom we talked.

"The sped arrow." This is the barb of unkindness that went straight to the heart of our neighbor, the wise-crack that stung, the indifference to our brother's needs, the cold withdrawal from the common life. The sharp trick, the self-interest we displayed, the spurning of the outstretched hand are among the things that torment us.

"The past life." Not only do we recall those things we did individually but our national mistakes, for which we, as citizens, are responsible. We neglected the developing of brotherly relations between Americans of good faith. We assumed an isolationist attitude toward the problems of the world. We allowed the sores of other nations to fester and flare up until the plague threatened us with its virus of hatred.

"The neglected opportunity." Here again we suffer from both our individual and national errors—the friendships we did not make, the help to the downtrodden we did not give, the responsibility we shirked. We created out of the wilderness a great na-

FOOD PRESERVATION TO BE SUBJECT OF MEETING

Introduction of latest improved methods of food preservation for general use throughout Oregon is expected to result from a statewide conference of all professional people interested in the war food conservation program, called by Dean Ava B. Milam, chairman of the Oregon Nutrition Committee, to be held in Portland May 5.

"We founded a democracy—but how have we lived up to it?"

We boast that the United States has the ideal living plan for all. If we mean what we say, then we must begin immediately to put an end to the race hatred that has been permitted to creep in, or we will undermine our own basic principle and go back hundreds of years to the bigotry of old that destroyed nations.

We have our opportunity now to correct old mistakes—but we must remember the four things that come not back: Let the words we speak be words of fairness and friendship. Let the arrows we send forth carry venes of brotherly love. Let our life be as near to what we want our future to be, as we can make it—and let us not neglect any opportunity to prove the worth of our faith.

Silver Wings Club Elects Cadet Officers

With Al Simpson as adviser, the Enlisted Air Corps Reserves of AHS have organized a local Silver Wings Club. The purpose of the organization is to keep these boys up on the latest changes in the Air Corps program and to get other boys of seventeen interested in becoming members of the Army Air Corps. This club consists of all the Enlisted Reserves and one faculty member.

The officers are: Cadet Captain Rolland Baughman, Flight Officer; Cadet First Lieutenant Dick Flaharty, Executive Officer; Cadet First Lieutenant Gerald Newton, Adjutant; Cadet Second Lieutenant Bill Shere, Squadron Commander; and Al Simpson, Flight Adviser. Other members of the club include Cadets Ed Berninghausen, Paul Cushman, Fred Starnes, Lorin Bailey, Kenneth Middle, and Bruce Nidever.

JOBS AND INCOME SECURITY

What happens to this country after the fighting is over is of vital personal concern to every American. How vital depends upon the extent to which we value our present way of life, our free institutions, and our existing form of government. These are all the prize at stake, and if they mean anything to us we must prepare now for after this war and be unwilling to see the idea of postwar planning made a political football, a grindstone for the axes of special interest groups, or a bone of contention between those who want to go back to the past and those who want to blueprint the "perfect world."

If, when the fighting is over, we have ex-soldiers selling apples on the street, or masses of workers idle, or people starving in one part of the country while food surpluses rot in others, we shall have lost this war. It will be too late to "plan".

Postwar planning must be faced realistically. We must prepare now against unemployment during the reconversion period, and for full and continuing employment under a peacetime economy. The first goal of postwar planning should be a foundation for better living through provision for enough jobs and lasting jobs.

The basis of America's postwar economy should be private enterprise, with private business and industry and agriculture continuing to operate as the people's primary means for providing jobs and producing goods and services; with government performing its constitutional function of establishing the rules of the game, acting as impartial referee, and effecting fiscal policies through taxation and expenditure programs such as private works that will mesh with private undertakings.

But the private enterprise system must adjust itself to a changing world. Before there can be blueprints there must be unity of purpose among all groups, with a realization that our group interests are identical. There must be fullest cooperation and team work based on mutual trust on the part of business, labor, agriculture, and government. This trust can't merely be assumed, it must be honestly earned through practice in the first place and thereafter preserved by continuous good faith, performance and collaboration. If our private enterprise system is to go forward there must be a new sense of responsibility for the welfare of all the people. Business must recognize its obligation to provide jobs and income security. Labor must promise a full day's work and make it possible for those seeking employment to have it. Both must recognize their dependence on agriculture as producer and consumer. Agriculture in turn must recognize that it is dependent upon business and labor and that there cannot be profitable markets for its products unless the rest of the nation prospers and has the means to buy.

None of America's economic groups is self-sufficient. Each is dependent upon the other; the terms business and labor and agriculture lose their capital letters and become "We, the People" when we realize that all are consumers—each others consumers, and there cannot be full and continuous employment unless more people have the means to buy more of the produce of our collective brains and hands and invested savings.

It is necessary that there must be adequate incentive to encourage risk and responsibility. Otherwise dollars saved will not be dollars dared for backing new responsibilities for new jobs, opened by new ideas, nor will the new ideas themselves be forthcoming.

We must recognize the need for a more balanced economy and the importance of utilizing our natural resources and other assets to the end that full time productive work will be available to all our citizens seeking employment.

We must preserve the sovereignty of the State of Oregon at all costs; restore to our communities and local governments confidence, initiative and self-reliance, and cease looking to the federal government for those things that we can and must do for ourselves.

If this crisis is to be successfully met industry, agriculture and labor must take the offensive. The freedom to produce is the only hope of a postwar world. We can surrender to the socially minded groups who have nothing to offer except ultimate bankruptcy, or we can win the greatest battle of history by assuring for all Americans the opportunity to work and, in so doing, extending that opportunity into the far corners of the earth. We must prepare the way for a decent standard of living and self-respect for our people or surrender to the compulsions and directions of the dictator state.

Those of us who are employers have a definite all-important responsibility. We have the obligation of providing jobs—productive work, a decent standard of living. Let's dedicate ourselves to that purpose. Let's recreate in ourselves the faith we once had—faith in ourselves, in our community and in our country. Let's risk all that we may gain all.

A. S. CUMMINS, President.
