

Poor Headlights Are Cause of Accidents

Headlights out of order or in poor adjustment constitute a serious accident hazard as winter brings on longer hours of darkness, Secretary of State, Bob Farrell said today.

Farrell said accident reports indicate many cars are operating with headlights either in such poor adjustment or not functioning at all. This is due chiefly to the fact there are many older cars on the streets and highways today and to the fact that drivers neglect having their lights checked periodically, he said.

It is important, from the standpoint of safe operation at night, that headlights function properly. In some cases the upper beam may be correct, while the bulb for one or both of the lower beams may be burned out. Some cases have been reported in which lights, damaged by minor accidents, have not been repaired promptly.

Farrell suggested drivers have their lights checked to be ready for the fall and winter months. He said they should be checked to make sure all bulbs are burning, that reflectors are clean and that the entire light is in proper adjustment.

"Then, when meeting cars at night, always remember to use the lower beam, to avoid blinding the approaching driver," he said. "Drivers blinded by glaring headlights often are involved in accidents due to their inability to see a curve in the road or some other obstacle in their path."

Asks Caution Driving Near School Houses

Calling attention to an upward trend in traffic accidents involving children under 14 years of age, Secretary of State, Bob Farrell today urged drivers to increase their caution when driving in the vicinity of schools as the fall term opens this month.

So far this year, fatalities among children under 14 years of age are 26 per cent greater than for the same period last year, Farrell said. Child injuries have increased 52 per cent.

A great proportion of the accidents in which children are killed or injured occur when the child dashes out into the path of an approaching car, the secretary of state said. For that reason, he urged drivers to anticipate this possibility when driving past areas where children are observed.

"As school opens, the school safety patrols will be in action again," he said. "Drivers must cooperate with these patrols in the interests of protecting younger children as they cross the streets. When the patrol members signal that the intersection is occupied, slow down and stop if necessary to yield the right of way."

Patrol members do not direct traffic, the state official explained. They hold younger children at the curb till there is a lull in traffic. Then they send them across and at the same time, signal that the intersection is occupied. Upon observance of the patrol's signal, the motorist is warn ed of his obligation to yield the right of way to pedestrians occupying a cross walk.

Many Wave Enlistments in August

Enlistment of WAVES in Oregon reached a new high mark for 1944 during August, reports Herb. Crain of the Medford Navy recruiting station, which handles WAVE applicants in this area. Increased enlistments were due primarily to three factors, according to the recruiter.

First, young women are realizing more than ever what a vital part they can play in the winning of the war now that so many men are needed for shipboard or overseas duty.

Second, the full understanding of the benefits of the "GI" bill of rights—all of which will come to women in the Navy as well as to the men—has developed in recent months following passage of this bill by congress. Under the bill a WAVE will receive major benefits in assistance in obtaining and education, cash payment on discharge, past war job preference and assistance, help in making loans for business, hospitalization and many other advantages.

Third, the enthusiastic reports to their friends at home of more than 1200 young women from Oregon who have enlisted in the WAVES and are on duty at more than 500 naval stations has brought increasing response among their friends left behind.

The fascinating and exciting features of the WAVES program are now better and more widely known and talked about, the recruiter reports.

The Sunday School meets for the study of the Bible at 9:45. Allen O McGee is the general superintendent. The morning sermon is at 11 on the subject

Our New Type

These few lines is a sample of week, known as Excelsior with the new type face, installed this MEMPHIS BOLD. It is a new style of type and more readable than the old type.

This week's issue of the Southern Oregon Miner is set in Excelsior, a new type style recently brought out by the Mergenthaler Linotype Company. As is clearly shown by the above comparison, the new type appears much larger and clearer yet gives as many words to the column as the type heretofore used in our pages.

This type meets the demand for larger print without any reduction in the amount of news matter.

In line with its established policy of giving its readers the best, the Miner is pleased to adopt this new and more readable type.
