

Navy Hunts Men for Radar Training

Broadening its search for men possessing basic aptitudes fitting them for training in radar, the U. S. Navy is urging all men entering the Navy either as enlistees from the 17-year-old group or as inductees from the Selective Service age group, who have at least one year of high school algebra, to take the Navy's Eddy test for radar training.

This was announced by Herb Crain of the Medford Navy recruiting station, who said it is likely that many men with such a background may qualify for radar training, leading to quick advancement in Naval service as well as to opportunities in the post-war field of electronics.

The Eddy test, it was emphasized, is nothing for the man of average intelligence and education to shy away from, consisting merely of problems of basic mathematics, fundamental electricity, elementary physics, practical shopwork and simple radio, with stress placed upon math.

Many of the radio and electricity questions therein may be answered simply by reasoning or thinking them out and do not necessarily require any previous experience in those fields for solution. Candidates were advised that when taking the test, it is preferable to make an intelligent guess rather than to leave any question unanswered.

Complete information concerning the Eddy test and other details of the Navy radar training program, which offers petty officer ratings to candidates completing this training, will be supplied at any Navy recruiting station.

S. P. Asks Civilians to Let Servicemen Use Railroads for Xmas

"Let the space you might occupy on a train from December 15 to January 10 be your holiday gift to some service man or his family," is the suggestion of F. S. McGinnis, vice president in charge of system passenger traffic for Southern Pacific Company.

Military and essential business travel will require at least 80 per cent of all train space in that period, McGinnis pointed out. The remaining accommodations, he said, will be eagerly sought by furlougees and by families of service men for visits to training camps.

"Civilians who can defer their train trips until after January 10 will be making the Christmas season a much happier one for many service men and members of their families," McGinnis declared.

Oregon's traffic death rate for the first ten months of 1944 was virtually the same as for the comparative period of 1943, Secretary of State Robert S. Farrell, Jr. said today.

The rate this year was 9.8 persons killed per one million miles of travel, compared to a rate of 9.1 a year ago. The death rate shows the number of persons killed in traffic in relation to the exposure as a result of travel.

While the rate was only slightly higher, in actual deaths, Oregon lost 209 lives during the first ten months of this year, compared to 189 for the same period of 1943.

The death rate for the month of October this year was 9.2 while a year ago, the rate was 10.3. Thus, this October showed some improvement.

Farrell urged drivers and walkers to exercise greater care during the winter months, when traffic hazards are greater as a result of weather conditions and longer hours of darkness.
